The Music of the Rain.

Falling, falling, on the house-top, With a music quaint and rare, Like the sound of human heart-throbs...

Like the dew to drooping flower; Like calm sleep to those who suffer; Or the lullaby to the babe who weeps...

Like the drowsy wail of popples With its wailing power, Coming to the weary listener...

Agriculture.

The Stock Farm.

A leading agriculturalist who recently visited the Provincial Stock Farm, near Hampton, has favored us with brief notes respecting it.

It is located about six miles from Hampton and a mile and a half from the Intercolonial Railway.

Our correspondent was shown over the farm by Mr. Barker, the manager. Among the cattle mentioned, is the polled Angus breed, of which there are, a fine bull 3 years old, three cows and two calves.

The next animal noticed is a red Norfolk bull—another polled breed—a very handsome specimen, well proportioned and of a bright red color and a fine glossy skin.

Of this breed there are also on the farm three cows, one heifer and two calves.

The next animal brought out, says our correspondent, was a one year old Ayrshire bull, which, in our opinion, did not reflect much credit on the breed.

Of Ayrshires there are one bull, five cows and five calves. Next came short horns. The bull is a remarkable animal for breadth and depth of chest with fair quarters and a good loin, indicating hardness but not the real blue blood.

The same may be said of the cow which is a fine animal, but the calf by her side was only fair and looked as if it could dispose of more of the lactical fluid than it got from its mother.

Of this breed there is one bull, seven cows with their calves and one heifer. Seventeen calves in all are being raised on the milk as it comes from the cows.

In reply to a question as to the milking qualities of the red Norfolk, Mr. Barker said one cow was milking well and the quality was good, but the others had not distinguished themselves at the pail yet.

The sheep on the farm are doing well. The flock was only fair and the black faces taking the lead. Among the latter there are some fine lambs.

From the appearance of the pasture land, however, they will probably require extra feed when the dry weather comes on, or they will not make a good thing of the pasture.

The farm is well situated. The interval is at the foot of the high land and near the barn, and looks as if it would produce as well as the ordinary Kings county interval land.

The pasture is not what it should be and will probably prevent cattle kept for breeding purposes from becoming too plethoric.

The tillage land, judging from what we saw of it, will give a good account of itself.

There has been some planting on the farm, 10 acres of buckwheat, 6 bushels of turnips, (turnips are not all in yet) 14 acres of fodder corn, 83 acres of potatoes. The oats promise well, but the fodder corn looks as if it wanted more heat.

The buildings are conveniently situated and in fair condition. Altogether we were better pleased than we expected to be with our first inspection of the Government Stock Farm.

Mention should be made of the collies which seem to be quite as important a factor in the management of the farm as any on the farm. The collies are kept loose for the stalls, and let out in the yard for use or inspection, and do not seem to relish going back into confinement.

Their antipathy to close quarters, however, seems to vanish as soon as the dogs are called, when they get to the barn as quickly as possible, from any part of the farm. -St. Cross Courier.

Feed or Breed - Which is the Most Important?

It is an erroneous idea which many farmers have that manure applied in the hill, or directly beneath where a plant is to grow, does more good than the same fertilizer spread broadcast and well incorporated through the surface soil.

There may be a few instances, however, where such a method is beneficial, but in general it is more benefited by hill manuring than by spreading the manure evenly over the surface of the ground, but with the majority of farm crops it is safe to say that manure, especially if somewhat coarse, should always be incorporated through the soil. Growing crops are supplied with manure through the soil, and in condition to be assimilated by the plant, and it is wholly unnecessary, as well as it is, to have the manure placed beneath the plant. Hill manuring is a very bad practice, and is to be avoided, besides giving generally poorer results. Many farmers have learned the folly of manuring in the hill by costly experiences. It does not require any argument to convince one, of the injurious effects of manuring through the soil, in the hill, or furrow, or in any other way, except in the instances where manuring in the hill, or furrow, has seemed to give better returns than could have been obtained with the same fertilizer applied broadcast, but it is only surmised that such was the case,
