Mr. Blair's auditors at the Nomination were much amused over the difficulty in which the Attorney General found himself by making statements that were altogether inreconciliable, and which did great discredit to the usual ingenuity of the honorable gentleman. In discussing the probable effect his defeat would have on the Government, he declared that "even if Blair is defeated the Government will live." And how, pray? Where in the Government ranks is there another lawyer competent to fill the position of Attorney General? Is it Mr. Ritchie, or Mr. Mitchell, or Mr. Barbarie?
