THE THREE SISTERS.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

At Anson Court great confusion reigned. Mrs. Anson had not left a line or a word for her husband when she crept surreptitiously out in the early dawn...

here," she added, with a half-frightened glance over her shoulder. "Papa has taken to killing him, and will do all he can to try him abroad to fight."

love his wife. His wife! No, his wife no longer! Never to be anything more to him in all that long, miserable future...

He looked up suddenly, with a face so drawn and old, so scored with passion and lined with pain, that the minutes might almost have been years...
