The Late Contest. It seems almost impossible to grasp thoroughly the magnitude of the victory just won by the Liberal Conservative party of York. The odds against us at the commencement of the campaign were so great, that it seemed like folly to attempt to overcome them. The triumph therefore, in view of this fact, is all the greater, and the results of the victory, the more extensive.

In another column, we have placed a great number and variety of extracts from Provincial and Canadian journals, of all shades of political opinion, and one did a crushing defeat for the Grit party, where they counted upon a magnificent victory, fell upon them, as a contempor-EDGECOMBE ary has well remarked, "like a thunder-bolt from a blue sky," and they have not yet recovered from the staggering blow.
