She takes them from the warm south side Of her fair house at eventide Her fragile fingers blend The flowers for graveyard wreath and cro s. Symbolic of a love and loss Whereof she knows no end.

Far, far behind her in the haze Of years and tears, those early days Of love and sorrow lie. She was a wife : on one true breast Her troubled girlhood found a rest In glad security.

Together in youth's morning time Their hearts rang true to true love's chime, Through never weary hours; Together, standing in the sun, They pulled with gladness, one by one, Love's purple passion flowers.

But death stole grimly to their side, And the bridegroom from the bride Her marriage coronet Was streely laid with blushes down Ere on ner curls of chestnut brown, The widow's cap was set.

She was a wife, true wife to one Whose noble race was swiftly run And, faithful to love's creed, She, made a widow in her youth, Math kept her first, her fairest truth, And widowed is indeed.

He left her lonely, when the springs Of life were fullest, when love clings With passion to its mate. She dropped the purple flowers of love Among the grass that waved above His grave-and learned to wait.

She gave him all she had in life, Her fair, fond self, a perfect wife, With dower of hope and youth She gives him all she has in death, Her chaste, white life, untouched by breath Or hint against her truth.

She waits. No longest year shall bring To her a second sponsal ring, No other marriage hours : She waits, until by Eden's tide, The bridegroom gathers for his bride The fadeless passion flowers.
