Oh, bare boughs, patient boughs,
Bravely ye bore, and well,
While April sebbed with dreary wall, And May's reluctant smile was pale, And Spring rehearsed her spell In vain, and found its potence fail.

And bird and bee and flower were fain To turn to winter's sleep again.

Oh, brave boughs, rewarded boughs, Ye waited not in vain! To-day, in all the orchard rows, With white of snow and flush of rose, Laugh all you lengths again, And borne on every breeze that blows Such fragrant breaths stir overhead As only happy hearts can shed.

Oh, sweet boughs, happy boughs, This is your carnival; Fruit-time is good, but blossom-days Are time of hope and time of praise:
And when the clossoms fall, And, blown along the orchard ways Are lost and trodden in at last, The sweetness of the year is past.

So, dear boughs, helpful boughs, Clasp tight each petal fair, Hold it on high till all shall see, And sad hearts passing heavily Read, traced in scented air, The lesson bravely learned by thee-That all good things or soon or late, Shall come to those who dare to wait.
