Is it they who spend their money With a carelessness that says We don't know much of poverty And its sad, uncertain ways? They who dress in gorgeous colors, And display their jewels free, Are these the people who compose. The "best society?"

Is it maidens who know naught of work But who dress from day to day So that Solomon in glory. Was not half arrayed as they? Do those youths whose manly virtues Are very hard to see (Although they have long purses)
Make the "best society?"

'Tis not where fashion's giddy whirls Her foolish votaries claim, 'Tis not where accident has made A little earthly fame, 'Tis not where riches are displayed With ostentation free That we can always surely find The "best society."

But they who do the tasks that come, With patient faith each day, Who strive to help some neighbor Have a little smoother way, Who have clean hearts and helping hands Whoever they may be, Such, whether rich or poor, make up The "best society."
