THE TIRED WIFE.

Miscellaneous.

All day the wife had been toiling. From an early hour in the morn, And her hands and her feet were weary With the burden that she had borne. But she said to herself: ;" The trouble That weighs on my mind is this-That Tom never thinks to give me A comforting hug or a kiss,

I'm willing to do my duty, To use all my strength and skill In making the home attractive, In striving my place to fill; But though the approval of conscience Is sweet, I am free to say, That if Tom would give me a hug and a kiss,

Then she counted over and over The years she had been Tom's wife, And thought of the joys and sorrows She had known in her married life To be sure, there was money plenty, And never a lack of food, But a kiss now and then and a word of praise

Would have done her a world of good,

'Twould take all the tired away."

Ah, many a one is longing For words that are never said : And many a heart goes hungry For something better than bread But Tom has an inspiration. And when he went home that day He petted his wife and kissed her In the old time lover-like way.

And she-such enigmas are women Who had held herself up with pride, At her husband's display of fondness Just hung on his neck and cried, And he, by her grief reminded Of troubles he might have shared Said: "Bless my heart! what a fool I've been!

And I didn't suppose you cared!

His wife, who was frantic with grief, placed her diamonds on his shirt front. These stones were valued at $800. Fearful lest the gems would be taken from the vault, she placed a watch at the tomb, and it was mainained for many weeks. Clayton was a Southerner, and the body was disposed of after the Southern fashion, above ground. A few days ago George Dobbs, who has care of the cemetery, was possessed with a curiosity to visit Hal Clayton's tomb, and, securing the keys of the vault, took a look at the remains. He was astonished to find that Clayton's beard and mustache had grown perfectly fresh, healthy appearance, as it might have had on a living man. The beard
