I saw thee blush to hear Thy name with mine allied; The crimson hue of burning shame Thy cheeks and forehead dyed;
Deep as the tint, I then felt mine
But too congenial with thine.

You should have blushed to feed
That flame you blushed to own,
Then thy young heart's falsity
Had been to me unknown; And I had deem'd thee still a thing Bright as my first imagining.

'Tis not unmoved I part,-But 'tis for thee I grieve; To think those eyes with truths own beam Could smile and yet deceive; That one so very young could be An adept in duplicity.

Think not I can forget-Only that I forgive;
Think not thy proud false heart again
Could in my fond soul live; Not all the tears thou couldst distil, Could blot the memory of that ill.

But fare thee well-no more Thy cheek shall blush for me; Unless it blushes at the thought That I have blushed for thee. You wove the chain—you've broke the spell! Enslaved and freed—Farewell! Farewell!

THE WIDOW BARLOW.

Peter Van Buskirk was very fond of money, not so fond that he quite starved himself to keep it, or hid it up chimney, or refused himself fire, or light, or a pll-low. But, yet, so very fond of it as to be on the very verge of miserhood without having quite fallen over.

Beggars reaped no harvest from his purse or kitchen; and match-makers At last he proposed by the proposed by the stated and be a last she said: could make no impression on his bachelor heart. Peter Van Buskirk saw through the latter as well as the former, and butpresence of bewitching crinoline as in that of a seedy gentleman with a folded document in his breast-pocket. The men marry one, she would spend his money while he lived and squander it after he was dead. And with this awful terror before him, Peter steered clear of the shoals of matrimony. Two or three times indeed he stood upon the verge of a tender passion. But each time some display of extravagance had frightened him back into his shell. Once it was an ostrich feather in a blue bonnet. Another time the sight of his fair one devouring ices. The third, the sudden assumption of voluminous crinomatrimony than ever.
