Uses of Honey. In all ages, says an exchange, honey has been used for many purposes. The Ancient Britons used to make mead, and this drink continued to be much used hundreds of years after them, When malt liquors became popular, and when sugar was introduced, the uses of honey went down for a time, but of late years it has gone up again with a bound. Honey is largely used in the manufacture of honey chocolate creams and honey chocolate tablets. There is a delicious taste of the honey in these articles, but they are so judi-ciously blended with the other materials that they are not too sweet. Honey is also now largely used by the confectioners in the places of lozenges, cough drops and other sweet-meats.
