Engineer Merriman took in the situation at glance and at once sounded the alarm by blowing the steam-whistle and ringing the bells. In an instant-certainly in a much shorter time than it takes to explain it-the flames shot through the cabin and over the sides of the cotton enveloping the entire boat in fire. Clerk Powell was upstairs at the time, and when he saw the flames he heroically ran through the smoke which filled the cabin and tried to arouse the sleeping people. He kicked at the doors, and in a short time almost everybody was awake. Then confusion worse confounded appeared, and the frantic people on the boat ran to different exits to make their escape, but the boat was piled high with cotton and the passage ways were filled with smoke. Many dropped before they were able to get to the forward part of the boat and were dead when the steamer went down.
