WOMEN SUFFRAGE.

(To the Editor of the Farmer.) Sir.-In view of the discussion on extending the franchise to women, the following Amendments to the Franchise Act piece of history is interesting; especially as in the hands of lawvers it may be used either for or against Dr. Stockton's motion. In A. D. 1361, Edward III summoned a council on the affairs of Irelaud, to which four earls, thirty barons, seven countesses and four baronesses, who had estates in Ireland were summoned.

Dr. Stockton might well argue that this is a precedent in favor of women voting, if not sitting in Parliament. His opponents might argue that as the experiment was not repeated, it could not be regarded as successful.

Yours obediently, CONSTITUTIONALIST.
