The "poor painter," lost in anticipations of the time when he should be a rich one, was leaning against the railings, whence he had stood and gazed abroad with Miss Saxonbury, -the purse she had given him lying in his bosom. In the last few weeks his whole existence had changed, for he had learnt to love Maria Saxonbury with a wild, passionate love. To be near her was bliss, even | do.' to agitation; to hear her speak, set her frame trembling; to touch her hand sent his heart's blood thrilling through his veins. It is only these imaginative, baronet. unearthly natures, too sensitive and refined for the uses of common life, that can tell of this intense, pure, etherealized passion, which certainly partakes more of heaven than of earth. He stood there, indulging a vision of hope—a deceitful, glowing vision. He saw not himself as he was, but as he should bethe glorious painter, to whose genius the to you.' whole world would bow. Surely there was no such impassible barrier between that worshipped painter and the daughter of Sir Arthur Saxonbury.

Mr. Yorke, a relative of Sir Arthur's and the heir pre- damp hand. sumptive to a portion of his estates, arrived at Saxonbury. He had been named Arthur Mair, after Sir Arthur. Raby Verner recognized him, for they had been at Christ Church together, but he had not recalled him to his memory since, and had never known him as the hope?" relative of Sir Arthur Saxonbury. He was a tall, strong, handsome young fellow; but ere he had been two days at Saxonbury, a rumor, or suspicion, (in the agitation of Raby's feelings he hardly knew which,) reached the artist that his visit was to Maria, that she was inevening, calm and lovely as the one when they had looked forth together at the Folly, the truth became clear to

They were seated in the drawingroom, all the family, when Maria stepped on to the terrace, and the artist followed her. Presently Arthur Yorke saw them pacing it together, Raby having given her his arm. Mr. Yorke drew down the corners of his lips, and stalked

"Thank you," he said to Raby, with | Sir Arthur Saxonbury as he quitted the freezing politeness, as he authoritatively drew away Maria's arm and placed it within his own, "I will take charge of | bodily illness, and thence to death, and Miss Saxonbury if she wishes to walk."

He strode away with her, and Raby, with a drooping head and sinking heart, descended the middle steps of the terrace. He stole along under cover of its high wall—anywhere to hide himself and his outraged feelings. That action, those words of Mr. Yorke's had but too surely betrayed his interest in Maria. He came to the end of the terrace, and found they had halted there, right above him. He was to hear worse words now, and he could not help himself. "Then you had no business to do it-

you had no right to do it," Maria was saying, in a petulant tone. "He was not going to eat me, if I did walk with "Excuse me, Maria, I am the best

"Well, then," she whispered, "though of course he had not the right to interfere, and it was very bad taste, and I will not submit to his whims, yet, yet-the time may come when he will be to me more than a cousin." His hand unloosed its clasp of her arm, and Maria Saxonbury hastened towards the drawing-room. He watched her in, and then, when no human eye or ear was near, his head sunk upon the cold railings, and a low wail of anguish went forth on the quiet evening air. Too surely, though Maria Saxonbury might never know it, had the iron entered into his soul.

CHAPTER IV.

THE BLOW TELLING HOME. In December, business took Sir Arthur Saxonbury to London. He paid a visit to the artist Coram, but he did he might towards the last. I invited not see Raby. "Has he abjured the art, or found another studio?" inquired Sir Arthur. The great painter shook his head. "He has not abjured it. it is no business of mine,—but when he came up from Saxonbury, he had certainly received his death-blow. A suspicion has crossed me whether your lovely daughter had anything to do with Pardon me, Sir Arthur, we are old friends-it is a thought only mentioned

"I should like to see him," said Sir Arthur. "Will you go with me?" They went. Raby was still alive, but it was getting towards his last day of Alas for the improbable dream he was life. He lay panting on his humble bed, suffering himself to nourish! alas for alone. A hectic flush, even then, lighted up his wasted cheek at sight of her

"All the skill in England would not have availed me," he earnestly said. "Sir Arthur, it is best as it is, for I am going to her. She has been waiting for me all these years. She told me my lot would not be a happy one. But it will soon be over now," he added, his voice growing fainter? "earthly pain of all kinds has nearly passed away."

Curious thoughts were perplexing scene. If a rude blow to his feelings had indeed caused Raby to sink into that blow had been dealt by Maria Saxonbury, how very little it was to retribution, for the blow Maria Raby had dealt out to him! He was a strong man, and had weathered it, but it had left more permanent traces on his heart than he had suffered the world to know. Sir Arthur lost himself in these thoughts, and then shook them off as a disagreeable and unsatisfactory theme.

On Christmas-eve he returned to Saxonbury. After dinner, his two daughters only being at table, he told them of the expected death of the artist Raby. Mrs. Ashton expressed sorrow and surprise. Maria said nothing, but her face drooped, and a burning color overspread it. Sir Arthur looked sternly at her. Her head only drooped the lower.

"It has been hinted to me that you tampered with his feelings," he said, in a severely reproachful tone. "Let me tell you, Maria, that the vain habit of encouraging admiration whence it cannot legally be received, always tends to ill. No right-minded girl would condescend to it.'

"I thought Maria talked a great deal with young Raby," remarked Mrs Ashton. "Had he been of our own order I should have interferred; but I knew she could not be serious. He was only a painter.

"She killed him," was the significant answer of Sir Arthur. And Maria Saxonbury burst into tears. Sir Arthur said no more. He may have thought it was the province of woman to inflict such wounds, and of men to bear them. He knew not how "Hallo, Arthur! "Yes; in my opinion. I bow to genius; I respect misfortune: Raby Raby was rich in both. Had he lived, I should have done something for him . as it is, all I could do was to render his death-bed a little more comfortable than it is might otherwise have been. "Does he suffer much?"

In point of fact, that vulnerable portion of the human frame was as yet intact in Maria Saxonbury. But she had liked him much. She had admired his beauty of face; she had reverenced his great gift, genius; she had sat most complacently to listen to his softly breathed words, and their scarcely-disguised theme, love. #### The Christmas Festival.

Is observed with important religious ceremony by the Romon Catholic Church, by the Church of England and all of its branches in the English dominions and the United States, by the Lutharan Church all over Europe. It can hardly be said to be regarded by any of these as of the importance of Easter, which marks the fulfilment of CHRIST'S earthly mission, and of all the promises made by GoD to man; but is second only to that great festival. The Presbyterian Church, and the whole body of "dissenting" churches, as they are called, at one time entirely rejected the day as they did all the feasts of the early Church, but they do not do so now with the same rigidity. We may mention, as an interesting fact, that the Edinburgh "Advertiser," for the year 1811, makes not the slightest reference of any kind to Christmas Day, even in its issue of December 24, the day before Christmas; and so late as 1844, the "Christian Messenger" of Halifax, N. S., a Baptist denominational paper, contains no hint whatever of Christmas or the holiday season, although its issue of December 27th has a poem on "The Death of Stephen." It would be next to impossible now to find a paper printed in the English tongue that
