THE OLD HOME AND THE NEW Ah! me, if now far from the old home, In the heart of the forest vast, Oft, peace-clouding visions brood o'er me, Sad reveries of the past, I fear me, their might in the old home A drearier gloom would cast.

O! the graves of those loved in the old home Life's shadows of grief and pain;
The bright-gleamings of youth's lights vanished
They would haunt my weary brain
Till my heart would break in the old home - With memory's woful train!

From days long gone by of the old home, With their hopes like sparking dew, To the present days of the new home Is a dream-like, changeful view; But the same care of heaven o'er the old home, Is still watching o'er the new.

O! rest, then, content with the new home, Be all puling thoughts away, See that life's duty is done in earnest,

Life is neither song nor play, Life to God in the old or new home Is the best and happiest way.

Suicide. -On Monday morning last, Mr. John Lane, proprietor of the upper ballast grounds, Chatham, committed suicide by hanging himself from a spruce tree on his own farm, near the Poor House. As is well known, the deceased has made several attempts on his own life, one of which occured four years ago, and two other attempts at different periods since. The inquest was held at the residence of Mr. Alexander Lane, a brother of deceased, at 2 o'clock on Monday afternoon, by Coroner, Dr. J. S. Benson. The evidence went to show that deceased had been drinking heavily for the last few week and that he had made an unsuccessful attempt on his life on Sunday last, which was prevented by his mother.

On Monday morning his family missed him about 10 o'clock, and alarmed the neighbors. After searching about half an hour, the deceased was found hanging from a spruce tree on the hill, a short distance in the rear of his house. He was suspended by a cece of ordinary rope which he had been seen, by two children in the neighborhood, taking with him.

Those who recently announced themselves as having control of the canvass for Mr. Mitchell in Northumberland, have, we learn, been deposed because of a few serious mistakes which they made. One of these was their announcement of the responsibility being entrusted to them, for it was, at once, interpreted as meaning that those of more influential position and better character had declined their usual work. Then, the publication of that Anglin-Burns illustration of Mr. Mitchell's weakened claims on Northumberland, showed incapacity that was hardly dreamed of before, while the empty threat concerning the publication of papers implicating Mr. Mitchell's opponent in disreputable transactions connected with the Chatham Railway, caused disgust to reign supreme in the breasts of the dictating committee, who are reported to have told the "conductors of the canvass" that they were doing more harm than good to
