CHATHAM BRANCH RAILWAY INVESTIGA-TION .- The Advance says : "The Provincial Secretary was here last week, and, with the Surveyor General, proceeded to enter upon an official investigation of matters in connection with the Chatham Branch Railway. The Freeman is wrong in crediting the above paragraph to this paper. We have not yet dealt with the proceedings of "the Commission" referred to and have refrained from doing so because we are under the impression that they learned nothing in reference to the Chatham Railway that the Local Government did not know before-their knowledge being also shared by that portion of the public who have interested themselves in the matter.

inconsistencies and want of corroboration in Annie Parker's story, and contrasted her character with that of the Osbornes. He denied that McCarthy had been murdered at all. If Mrs. McCarthy could make out that her husband was murdered she would have hard work to make the world believe that she had not something to do with it herself. He felt sure she had not, but her brother, O'Neill, might have struck him on the head and thrown him into the river. He did not think he did so, but to clear a man for murder it was only necessary to show to the jury that it might have been done some other to show that what he has supposed was impossible.
