Professional Etiquette. It seems that the Times is not the only vehicle of vulgarism in Moncton, but that the same absence of moral restraint and sense of propriety which its columns manifest also characterizes certain persons who, by some means, have obtained the right to practice law there. Messrs. Roe Bros,; who are known as map makers in different parts of the province, brought action to recover the price charged for their maps of Westmorland, against several subscribers. During the hearing of one of the cases the following scene took place, as reported in a despatch to the St. John

Telegraph:-Moncton, Sept. 6.—The case of Ro Bros. vs. Copp is still occupying the attention of Justice Wortman. Quite an excitement was created in court this morning between Mr. Wells one of the Counsel for the plaintiff and Mr. Geo. P. Thomas one of the Counsel for the defence. Mr. Wells who was cross-examining Mr. Copp insinuated that the witness had been coached by Mr. Thomas during the night. Mr. Thomas claimed that Mr. Wells was in duty bound to apologize. Mr. Wells stated that Mr. Thomas could settle the matter outside and expressed himself ready to go out and challenged Mr, Thomas to go with him. Mr. Thomas went and struck at Mr. Wells knocking him through the Court room window and breaking two

The Rearing of Calves. [From the Illustrated "Journal of Agriculture".] remarks on the best methods of rearing | it a trial. Poultry Herald. calves will prove of service.

At first thought, it may seem superfluous to offer suggestions on what is usually considered a very simple subject, one with which every farmer is supposed to be familiar; but, the fact is, very few have given the subject that amount of consideration which its importance demands.

mismanagement generally, great losses are incurred by disease, stunted growth, and Contrast the fate of the poor calf with his more fortunate neighbours the foal, or careful nursing of the mother, in the full enjoyment of nature's nourishment in its pure and natural condition, allowed to enjoy their youthful gambols in the open the poor calf is rudely torn from its moth. er, in most cases as soon as it is born, and not even allowed to imbibe the medicinal milk intended by nature to act as a mild aperient to cleanse the stomach and bowels of the accumulations of the intra-utervarious methods of rearing calves. Thus, we know some breeders who, under their own direct supervision, have been eminently successful in hand-raising calves, and prefer it to allowing them to suck the mother. Others again, when obliged to trust to servants to attend to their feeding, have been more than disappointed. Among the breeders of the valuable, high bred Shorthorns, the custom of allowing the cow to-suckle her own calf, and invariably followed with the best results.

By this means greater size, earlier maturity, and the fuller development of the characteristics of the breed, are ensured. On dairy farms, or on small farms where milk is required for butter or cheese, it is Boschee's German Syrup has proven itself inconvenient to allow the calf to suck the to be the greateset discovery of its kind mother, and hand-feeding has to be resorted to, and, properly attended to can be fect. growth, and indifferent health. Where too many calves are kept together and are fed in open troughs, the strong overcome the weak, and we have an exemplification of "the survival of the fittest." On a recent visit to the dairy farm of Mr. James Drummond at Petite Cote I was shown a very sensibly planned calffeeding trough. It consisted of a long trough, divided into spaces for two calves; each calf was secured by his head being placed between two upright posts, one of which is movable and secured by a pin, a plan of securing cattle common enough in many parts of the province; by this contrivance each calf is insured his own share of milk and they are kept secured in this way for a short time after being fed, to prevent them sucking one an others navels; a practice which, in irregularly fed calves, is both common and injurious. The housing of calves is another very important subject, and one on which ing up the life springs of the body. Proper food, at a natural temperature, given often, (if possible, not less than four times a day) in not too large quantities, and so given that each calf gets its proper share; abundance of space, light, and air, scrupulous cleanliness, and avoidance of damp, are all requisites for the successful
