

Miramichi and the North Shore, etc.

THE CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT was adopted in King's County on Thursday last. The voting excited comparatively little interest, a very small proportion of the electors going to the poll.

ASHORE.—In the dense fog of Wednesday morning the tug Salus was run ashore at Balger's Cove near the "Kerr Mill." She was lightened yesterday by aid of a scow and probably floated off in the evening.

"DUTCHMEN."—The usual weekly meeting of the Dutch Reform Society was not held on Tuesday last, being postponed until the following Tuesday, on account of the Hall being engaged by the Fair-hair Family.

LOOK OUT FOR HIM.—A fellow who is rather hard on "American citizen" ship writes such a letter to the Advocate this week as suggests the necessity for his being looked after. We commend his case to our English American Consul.

BLOOD-SHOWER.—A shower of liquid matter resembling blood fell on Tuesday night between Newcastle and Douglastown. It was noticed by Mr. Jas. Kinn who showed some green bloughs on which it had fallen and who says that a fancy of newly peeped poles on his place were spattered with it.

ANOTHER PICNIC.—Our North-east friends advertise a grand picnic on Union Hill grounds, near Baker's Mill, on 16th inst. The attractions offered include fine fly-fishing, and sight seeing at the new grundy quarries. There ought to be a good attendance, especially as the Advance is to carry excursionists at reduced rates. See advt.

SCOUTS.—A young man named Yeo, who works at Black Brook complains that a few nights since he was set upon by over a half dozen men at that place and severely handled. He says he knows of no cause for the outrage, nor has he any idea of the identity of any of the parties. It is seldom that we hear of such lawlessness in the place indicated and hope that the guilty parties may be discovered and punished.

PROVINCIAL APPOINTMENTS are gazetted as follows:— In the County of Gloucester—Henry A. Sormany to be Commissioner of the parish of Shipigan Civil Court, and Richard Miller, Justice of the Peace.

In the County of Kent—Louis N. Bourque, M. D., to be a coroner; and Jean B. Richard, Sebastian Babineau, Michel Savoie, and Jude LeBlanc, to be justices of the peace.

METHODIST.—At the Methodist Conference in Session last week, in Charlotte-town, Rev. H. McKeown, of Chatham was elected President. The draft of stations for the Miramichi District was as follows:

Chatham—S. T. Loew, Newcastle—M. R. Campbell, Richville—J. N. Parker, Baie du Vin—J. Tabusaint—J. Howie, Campbellton—Wm. Tippett, Derly—D. H. Widge.

Rev. G. M. Campbell is down for Charlottetown. THE LUDLOW SEIZURE.—Mr. John Campbell writes to the Advocate asking us to say that he is not the author of the letter which appeared in the ADVANCE recently, signed, "Fisherman," and was afterwards attacked by Mr. Freeze. We cheerfully comply with Mr. Campbell's request, as the name given to us, in confidence, by the writer referred to was not Campbell. We reply to Mr. Campbell in this instance, but prefer that he should, in future, communicate directly with the ADVANCE, instead of through another paper in which his request might be overlooked—besides, the direct request is required by courtesy, of which Mr. Campbell ought to be aware.

THE PROPERTY AT BATHURST NOTED.—On Thursday the farms, mills, dwellings, lots, &c., of the estate of Ferguson, Rankin & Co., were put by auction. There were nearly 500 persons present, but it resulted in all being withdrawn, and no sale made. The model farm, the first lot offered was withdrawn, the highest bonafide bid being $8,000. The homestead property, one of the finest in the province, was also withdrawn; the highest bid was from Sheriff Temple, $9,000. The mills, wharves, dwelling houses, and town lots were offered separately, but failed to find a purchaser at the "open" prices asked. These fine properties ought to find purchasers at private sales in a very short time.—Telegraph.

ESCAPE FROM A DUCKING.—The Princess Louise had quite a narrow escape from drowning while fishing on Thursday the canoe, which contained the Princess and Duke of Argyll, approached a strong eddy at the foot of a jam of logs, one of which projected some distance below the other. The Indian in the boat was intently watching the lines being cast for a rise and forgot to keep a lookout ahead. As the canoe swung into the eddy the projecting log struck the Indian on the side of the breast with such force as to throw him down and stop the headway of the canoe. As the Indian fell his feet caught in a trout rill lying under the crossbars of the canoe, snapping the rod in a dozen pieces. The canoe rolled from side to side. As it nearly went over the Indian threw himself into the water clear of the craft, which was then controlled by the Indian in the stern. The Princess and her father-in-law maintained their presence of mind throughout and their fortunate escape is as much due to that fact as to the prompt jump of the Indian. The slightest panic and the party would have been precipitated into the swift running water, there about 12 feet deep.

A NARROW ESCAPE.—Our correspondent "Teazer" sends us the following particulars of a narrow escape from drowning—On Wednesday 25th, as T. W. Crocker, Edw. Newcastle and Mr. John McDonald of Bay in Vin, were trying to make McLean's Gully—the channel dividing the main land of Esquimaux from Huckleberry Island—in Mr. Crocker's small boat, the "Maggie" the boat upset on the outside bar. When the upset took place the anchor went overboard and held the boat against the breakers. The occupants got to the boat's bottom, Mr. McDonald getting hold where the centre board came down through the bottom and Mr. Crocker clinging to the bottom board. They were in a very dangerous position for about an hour, as the sea was heavy and they had a hard time holding on to the boat until they were rescued by Messrs. Andrew Wells, Jr., Michael McIntyre and Dudley Perley, Jr., who put off from the lobster establishment of Mr. Andrew Wells on Huckleberry Island. Where the boat upset was about half a mile from the shore of Huckleberry Island and equally distant from the main land. Mr. Crocker lost 14 salmon out of the boat.

FIREMAN'S PICNIC.—The Newcastle Firemen are to be congratulated on having got up for Dominion

Day, one of the most successful picnics ever held on the Miramichi. The Advance was chartered for the occasion and every preparation necessary was carefully made. The day was everything that could be desired and the friends of the organization, who seemed to represent all classes in the community, crowded the boat, Chatham and vicinity seeming to vie with Newcastle in the friendly work of furnishing the excursionists who went.

The excellent attention of the Committee to method in all their arrangements was visible from the first, and gave assurance to patrons that everything good organization and management could accomplish might be expected. Arrived at the large pier near Grant's Landing, Bartibogue, the grounds near Grant's Landing, without any difficulty or accident and proceeded at once to enjoy their surroundings as though picnickers only can. Bambery's Band, who were numerous. They were well provided with shade and dancing room, however, in a large canvas tent erected for the occasion. There were prizes offered for a number of contests and it was intended to have some canoe and other races on the river in front of the grounds, but the rough water prevented. Much interest was manifested in the foot races and jumping matches.

In the first Foot Race there were four entries and the prize, a gold chain, was won by Wm. Rice of Black Brook.

In the second Foot Race there were seven entries and the prize, a revolver, was won by J. R. Lawlor of Newcastle.

Wm. Crosby, of Chatham, won the third race, the prize being a pair of sleeve buttons.

The Fourth Race (little boys) brought on a tie between Fulton Gerts of Newcastle and another lad, and was proposed to divide the prize—a pound of candy—between them, but Master Falk with a pluck which promises well for his future, said he would win all or take none. So, the tie was run over again and the lucky lad got the whole pound of candy.

The Running Jump contest was a close one between Alex. Barr of Douglastown and Peter McAdam of Chatham. There was so much confusion over the result of the final trial between the men that, although it was not entirely satisfactory, the prize was awarded to Barr, but each contestant had friends who were equally convinced that their man had fairly won.

After a very enjoyable day was spent the party again boarded the steamer, which had, meantime, been on her regular trip to Bay du Vin and the return home was made in good time, everybody appearing to be perfectly satisfied with the day's enjoyment. The management appeared to be very watchful and solicitous in doing everything possible to add to the pleasure of the excursionists and are deserving of much praise. The Committee having charge of the arrangements were—John Morrice, W. H. Back, W. J. Miller, J. B. Russell, R. H. Greenley, W. Murray, Frank Peters, T. J. McKeown, Jas. Rundle, R. Fairman, P. Wheeler, J. D. Creighton, M. Quigley, H. E. Parker, Wm. Fenn.

They are desirous of expressing their thanks to their patrons on the occasion and especially to those of Chatham, Black Brook, &c., but we have no doubt that all who went were so well pleased that they feel they are indebted to the Committee for affording them so excellent an opportunity for spending the Holiday.

THE FAIRBIRNS.—On Monday and Tuesday evenings the Fairhair Family gave Scottish musical entertainments. The houses were very good and the entertainments gave great satisfaction. The programmes consisted of a miscellany of Scottish and other songs, sketches, and anecdotes, which excited the hearty applause of the audience.

On the evening of Dominion Day several English and Irish songs were sung by each of our spirited reciters were given by Mr. Fairhair. The favorites of the evening seemed to be "Cullin Heroic," sung in costume by Miss Polly Fairhair, "Mrs. Jones' Musical Party," and a selection of strathspeys and reels on the organ by Miss Bessie Fairhair. "The Bould Soger Boy," and "The Day of Biscay," by Mr. Fairhair also elicited loud applause. These entertainments have a genuine merit about them which cannot fail to make them successful in Canada.

A Foreign Convict at large in the Province.—Capt. Guizot of the French barque, Eplandine, which arrived here on the 23rd ult. from Cayenne, French Guiana, S. A., consigned to Messrs. R. A. and J. Stewart, had a man on board who was not of the ship's crew, but made his appearance on deck when the vessel was but one day out from the port named. Cayenne is a French penal port, or Island, very close in on the coast of French Guiana and, while discharging there, vessels are permitted to employ convict labor. The Eplandine had employed a number of convicts while discharging ballast, and the man who made his appearance on deck as described was at once recognized as a convict who had worked forty days on board. Capt. Guizot did not put him in irons, as he seemed to be harmless and he was allowed to work in the same manner as the members of the crew. His age appeared to be about 35 years and he gave his name as Pradel. He admitted that he had killed a man in a quarrel and it is, therefore, to be presumed that the crime for which he was transported was murder.

Capt. Guizot, on his arrival at Chatham, reported the matter to the French Consul, who at once communicated with the Consul-General at Quebec. Meantime, as the vessel was not lying at the wharf a close watch was kept on the man, who was not allowed to go on shore, and steps were being taken to secure the necessary authority for his extradition. But on Wednesday night of last week six of the Eplandine's crew, including the watch, deserted, taking with them the convict. Pursuit being made two of the crew were caught by Mr. James Hannah's of the Richibucto road, the remainder escaping.

Misapprehensions.—A correspondent who is engaged in fishing business in Miramichi Bay writes as follows respecting some of the Beacon lights on the North side:—"I take the liberty of addressing you with regard to the state of some of our lights on the north side of the Miramichi Bay, and the wrong position in which they are placed. Take Negue Gully, to begin with, on which there are two lights—a light-house and a Beacon. As is well known to frequenters of those waters, the Negue Bar runs out over half a mile from the shore and the channel is on the South side of it. However, if a stranger were to try to go in on a rough night by taking the two lights in line it would lead him right over the bar at the shoalest part—perhaps to wreck his craft.

As to the Tabusaint Gully, the lights are on the "Old Gully," (there being a new Gully broken out last winter to the north of it). These lights are of no manner of use, as no craft, whatever, is able to go in at low water. The new Gully is a splendid entrance with over three fathoms in the channel, but of no use in the night, as there are no lights on it.

However, the worst place of all is the "Little Gully" of Tracadie. The beacon light stands nearly three points to the Northward of the channel, and the leading buoys are right over the middle of the bar. Last Wednesday, 25th, three large boats were nearly wrecked on account of this. I was the last to leave the fishing grounds and on coming in kept to the south of the buoys, intending to keep the south side of the channel. Instead of that I struck three times on the north side. There was a heavy sea on at the time and I had hard work to get my little vessel off before she filled.

Now, sir, we fishermen think the Government ought to have some one to look after these matters. There appears to be no good reason why some person able and willing to protect our lives and property should not be paid to look after the Lights and Beacons as well as the boats and any fishermen. If the Government cannot give us the harbor at Esquimaux they ought not to allow their Beacons leading to other harbors to be false ones. In the name of my brother fishermen

A. A. "Mr. Adams" Again.—"The Manager appears to regret the defeat of Mr. Adams in 1874—that he was not then properly treated, &c., all of which is very amusing when we remember that the Manager at that very time occupied a position on the staff of the St. John Telegraph, a paper which took the lead in an unflinching opposition against Mr. Adams and all associated with him in opposition to the Free School Law. In view of these facts, the Manager's crocodile tears for Mr. Adams now are very much out of place."

The "Manager" was not a member of the Telegraph staff at the time referred to, and during the time between nomination day and polling day in Northumberland he was fishing at Indiantown, Miramichi, and not interfering with politics at all. So much for what the Advocate knows about the "Manager."

The Policy of Retaliation.—The few recognized leaders and spokesmen of the Tory party in Northumberland who live in Chatham and Newcastle, appear to be busying themselves, just now, in the work of fanning the old sentiment which they kindled a few years ago against the ADVANCE, with the hope that they may succeed in renewing the dying embers of their incendiary work. When this paper was first established, the fact that its editor was born in another Province of the Dominion, was seized upon to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the community, as if a British subject was not entitled to his privileges as such, not only within British possessions, but in any civilized country of the world. Next, the local public were assured that the ADVANCE was backed by the milling concerns of the river and started with a view of assisting to form a pretext for awakening the prejudices of the class who object to "strangers" settling in the