At the western end of the steamboat landing the Canadian was leading by two and a half lengths, and stroking 30 to the minute. From this point he seemed to take very little more notice of his guide in the cutter, repeatedly looking round to see where he was going, and seemingly fearful that he should encounter some floating rubbish. Hawdon, on the contrary, never took his eyes off James Percy, and receiving the signal he quickened his stroke to 38, but gained no advantage, as his steering became very bad. At one moment he bored in towards the northern shore, the next he pulled hard with his left and veered out again, as though afraid of bringing about a foul.

At the foot of Grindstone Quay Hawdon made a fine effort, sweeping his sculls through the water in beautiful style, and increasing his pace materially. Hanlan

One hundred pounds to ten was accepted several times, Hawdon's admirers thinking his wonderful staying powers might enable him to pull through at the finish. Nearer the Bridge, Hawdon further quickened his stroke to forty, but the Canadian would not suffer too great liberties, and bending down to work once more, he went through the Bridge with a lead of fully two lengths, having made the distance from the start in 3 mins. 40 secs.

The present Government were returned by a large majority in September, 1878, the issue at the general election being a revenue versus a protective tariff. A protective tariff, in order to encourage the industries of the Dominion, was advo cated by the leaders of the then Opposition, and the Government they have since formed do not desire to avail themselves of direct taxation. They also desire to point to the very hostile action of the American Government towards the Dominion in all matters relating to tariff, and to the fact that manufacturers in the United States have establish ed combinations under such perfect organizatio that should any special industry arise in Canada the Canadian market is at once flooded with a corresponding article of American produce sold below value, the effect of such combination being equal to that which is produced by a Government bounty.
