In speaking of a person's faults, Pray don't forget your own; For he who lives in a glass house Should seldom throw a stone, If we have nothing else to do But talk of those who sin, 'Tis better we should look at home, And from that point begin.

We have no right to judge a man, Till he is fairly tried; Should we not like his company, We know the world is wide, Some may have faults-and who has not The old as well as young, And many have, for aught we know,

The Turret Ship Glatton.

The British Fleet, has almost lost the picturesqueness which used to characterize it in the old times, and a war ship now adays is nothing but an unsightly complicated engine of destruction, often as dangerous to those who man it as to the

"The Glatton is a turret-ship ram. Its single turret carries two 25-ton guns, and its ram, which is eight feet below the waterline, projects twelve feet from the bow. It has two decks-an exposed main deck and a protected hurricane deck; but when the ship goes into action the water ballast is increased so as to sink the main deck below the water level, and then nothing but the hurricane deck and the turret is exposed to the enemy's fire. Now excepting that the Polyphemus has no turret, its general appearance will be very similar to that of the Glatton when in action. Its hull will not be wholly submerged, but its most prominent feature will be its hurricane deck, which extends to nearly two-thirds of the length of the vessel, and is about half its breadth. The upper part of the hull is made convex, so as to deflect any shot which may strike it; but it is flattened on the top, beneath the structure which carries the hurricane deck. The lower part of the hull is angular.
