The clouds are lighted, I see the blue, The wind in the leaves is like gentle words Quietly passing twirt me and you; The evening air will bathe the buds With the soothing coolness of summer floods Love me beloved ; for many a day Will the mist of the morning pass away; Many a day will the brightness of noon

Lead to a night that hath lost her moon,

And in joy or in sadness, in autumn or spring

My love to my soul is a needful thing. Love me beloved : for thou mayst lie Dead in my sight, math the same blue sky Love me, O love me, and let me know The love that within thee moves to and fro, That many a form of thy love may be Gathered around thy memory.

Love me beloved; for I may lie Dead in thy sight neath the same blue sky,— The more then best loved me the less thy pain, The stronger thy hope till we meet again; And forth on the path way we do not know With a load of love, my soul woult go. Love me beloved; for one must lie Motionless, lifeless beneath the sky; The pale, stiff lips return no kiss

To the lips that never brought love amiss

And the dark brown earth be heaped above

The head that lay on the bosom of love. Love me beloved; for both must lie Under the earth and beneath the sky, The world be the same when we are gone, The leaves and the waters still sound on, The spring come forth and the wild flowers live, Gifts for the poor man's love to give; The sea-the lordly, the gentle sea-Tell the same tale to others than thee And joys that flush with an inward more Irradiate hearts that are yet unborn; A youthful race call our earth their own And gaze on its wonders from thought's high

Embraced by fair nature, the youth will embrace

The maiden beside him, his queen of the race-

When thou and I shall have passed away

Like the foam flake thou looked'st on yesterday. > LONDON, May 14. - The Daily News says: "The Cabinet Council to-day will have, it is believed, a serious question to decide. Mr. Forster, Chief Secretary for Ireland, having returned from Dublin, is said to be disposed to recommend the renewal of coercive legislation in regard to Ireland. We sincerely trust that no reason will be found for such a step, but if sufficient cause is shown to recommend the renewal of the Coercion Act, and if the peace of Ireland must depend on the continuance of such legislation for the present, the Liberals will be obliged to assent to the proposal.'

The Ashton-under-Lyne Reporter relates that when Lord Hartington was canvassing in North East Lancashire, he came across an old farmer, "Jim," as he is always that the manufacture of blood goes on, known by his Crawshawbooth acquaintances. "Jim," is an elector, and, more- well-being of the system. The good dame having completed her inspection, which seemed to be to her satisfaction, invited the visitor in, and said, "Aye, he's up steers, making t' beds; dun vo want to see him?" Hardly had she finished the sentence than a gruff voice came from aloft, "Halloa, who's here neaw; is't one o' them canvassin' chaps? Ah thout we gotten rid on em : chuck him aht!" "Nay," replied the woman, he seems a decent mon this; come dahn and see for thisel." After some prevailing Jim descended, and after giving the Marquis a slow, upward stare from the sole of his boot to the crown of his hat, exclaimed, "Well, and what does ta' want?" "I've come to see if thou'll gie me thy vooat," replied his visitor. "Gie tha my vocat! Who art ta ?" "I'm one o'th Liberal Candidates, "Lord Harting. ton." The Princess Pauline of Wurtemburg has been married to Dr. Wilm, a medical practitioner of Breslau, with the consent of the King of Wurtemburg. In a short address preceding the ceremony, the officiating clergyman reminded the bridegroom that in marrying him, the Royal bride had surrendered a good deal that was esteemed grand and valuable in life. When the bride's turn came to make the marriage responses, she added to the syllable, "yes," the following words in a quiet tone, "I declare I give up nothing that can at all be valued in comparison to the happiness awaiting me, and I consider my lot a most enviable one. The clergyman who was thus snubbed, subsequently excused himself while lunching after the ceremony at the Ducal-table. -Ex.
