the quality of the soil and the rigor of the climate of New Brunswick. We, in the sister provinces may learn many profitable lessons from the hospitable New Brunswickers; while they and every person living in any of the sister provinces, or on this continent, may profit greatly by the lesson we are about to impart, that is, if they have any real desire to advance the interest of agriculture, horticulture, or the improvement of themselves, their descendants or the country in which they reside.

We called at the house of Mr. Peterson, one of the leading members of this colony. We found him to be a well informed, gentlemanly person; he could speak English fluently and well. His house and grounds were the picture of neatness and taste. A neat lawn was in front of the house; trees and shrubs were planted; two rustic seats were in the grounds; a very neat rustic fence enclosed the lawn and grounds, and this in the backwoods of N. B.! He invited us to go with him to see the school house, which we did. This was a small log building, which on entering we found to be beautifully and tastefully decorated with evergreens and flowers.

Mr. Peterson then informed us of his great and noble plan that he wished to introduce into this settlement. It is this: To make the school grounds a garden and to make the school around the school all kinds of trees and flowers that would grow in that locality. He said this plan would give the children a knowledge of trees and plants that could not be so well imparted in any other way; it was the stepping-stone to agriculture, fruit and floriculture, and when the children grew up, they would always have a love and taste for beauty, order and refinement, and Botany would then be better known.

Reader, can you imagine the benefits of such a plan? Schoolmaster, what do you know of Botany, of trees, fruits or plants? School trustees, councilors or members of Parliament, have any of you brought forth or attempted to introduce any plan that would do so much good? As you may probably suppose, we said to Mr. Peterson: "The children would destroy the trees and plants." He replied: "They do not; they love them; they take care of them; they take a pleasure in seeing them look nice; the children cultivate them and delight to do it." We asked if he had ever seen the plan carried out; he said that he had in his native village, and it answered admirably.

Is there one or more of our readers who will try and make one step toward introducing this plan? Could not more good be done in this way than any other towards imparting agricultural knowledge? This plan might, without any cost, be adopted, if properly introduced and encouraged. Who will aid us in attempting to introduce the plan? We shall be happy to hear from any one that will really take up this plan and endeavor to carry it out in any one school house. We will lend the aid of this journal and our good intentions to those who will introduce the system.

They have a nice church erected in this settlement. We called to see the minister. His house--a small log one, among the stumps--had a neat little well-kept lawn and flowers in front of it. We waited patiently at the door, but they will be ready soon." "Do not be in a hurry; they will be ready soon." Presently we were invited into the house. Everything was neat and clean, and his reverence had dressed himself in his very becoming black cloth suit. He was a well-informed, elderly gentleman, and spoke in tolerably good English; he was very hospitable, and a sound, intelligent person. His broad, hard hands showed plainly that he did not eat the bread of idleness. The inhabitants of New Denmark generally were good, useful, home-made cloth, and wooden clogs or shoes.

We went into another garden where different kinds of vegetables were growing. An orchard had been planted, but despite all the watering and nursing that care could give, every tree was dead. And yet these poor Danes were compelled to pay for these trees that had been sold to them as good ones at an enormous price, about 50c. each. This was most probably done by some of those unprincipled agents, and no doubt these trees had been killed by the frost affecting the roots before they were delivered to the purchasers. We think there should be protection against country people being so terribly robbed as many are by agents who readily obtain signatures under false statements.--Farmer's Advocate.

The Apple Crop in Nova Scotia. It has already been stated in these columns that this fruit has been an abundant crop this season in various parts in Nova Scotia. Though last year's yield was quite large, the growers disposed of their stock at remunerative prices. Since the apples first made their appearance in this market, the country vendors on each arrival from the Nova Scotia, have been heavily loaded, but the market in consequence has been well supplied. The impetus given to the trade this season is demonstrated from the fact that farmers, in most cases, have given more attention to the orchards than they were wont to do.

In consequence of the prolific yield, the fruit has become considerably cheaper within the last few years, and during the next two years, if as productive as this season's yield, the ruling figures now will not, perhaps, be maintained, but are expected to be low. This appears to be the opinion of some dealers, but there is a prospective increase export trade, and as soon as better facilities for shipment can be had from Nova Scotia to the English markets, the extra supply, in our market will ultimately drop off, and perhaps an increase rather than a decrease in the prices will be the result. Some of the largest shippers from Granville, near Annapolis, are Messrs. Eben Bent, Benjamin Miller, William Miller and Edward Bent. These gentlemen each year, or when the crop proves abundant, transport from 1,200 to 1,500 barrels of the various grades. In about ten days the cider, which is manufactured from the unsaleable fruit, will be brought over. Some years ago, however, have already come to market, but the season is not cold enough to warrant a large quantity being manufactured, as it would not keep any length of time in this temperature. From three and a half to four barrels of fruit are required to make one barrel of cider which the shippers dispose of at from $1.50 to $2 per barrel, wholesale.--Telegraph.
