Mabel's Dream.

"Well, petite, is it to be wine or cafe

Standing in his own doorway and looking out over the thousand acres of waving grain which surrounded the home where he had been born and reared, James Burton had rather disdained the city, where men jostle each other, the strong mounting on the downfall of the weak, until a summer visit brought Mabel Aberdeen, a butterfly of fashion, to win his heart and conquer his prejudice, so that the midwinter holidays found him at her side in her city home, it from me, are you? Fetch it out here, holding the hand that bore his ring, this minute." and saying, with a smile-

"I have been brought up to believe that 'wine is a mocker, and strong drink raging,' but when one is in Rome, you know-and I don't want to bring discredit on my patroness by unconventional singularity, which I believe is the greatest crime in your social code. So I leave you to decide-wine or cafe noir?"

She looked at his strength. Of all men, there could be no danger to him. And women would think it a country prejudice, should he decline wine on

New Year's morning. "Come to me the first thing in the morning, and then do as I bid you," was her decision.

And five minutes later the crisp snow was crunching under his firm tread, and she had gone to her own room to tell cousin Grace what a splendid fellow he was, and afterwards to dream of tomorrow's festivities.

The frosty air seemed to fairly dance with the jingle of the bells.

The reception-room was like a hall in a fairy palace.

Every heart leaped with the good cheer of the New Year. "Wine or cafe noir?"

And with her jeweled hand she held a fragile wine-glass brimming with the red blood of the grape, and looked into have envied. "To the health of our fair hostess!

May her beauty never wane !" And for good or ill the wine had pass ed his lips.

After that he left her to go the round of New Year's calls.

"Gentleman, am I my own master or

"But, Burton, you are not fit to go to her now. Come, there's a good fellow !-we'll get you to bed, and in the morning you'll be all right again. You see, you ain't seasoned like us old stagers; but the women don't take that into account, and she'll think you're on the high road to ruin, and all that."

"I promised her that I would go to her the first thing in the morning and the last thing at night, and I never fail in the performance of a promise when it is avoidable."

"That's all right as a rule, but New Year's day dont come but once in twelvemonth, and you can tell her that it was so late when we got through, and you knew she would be too tired to see you, and all that.'

"No, I wouldn't lie to her in the merest trifle. But Blake, you're making a mountain out of a mole-hill." tell you I'm all right. Here, let me get out of the carriage. I'll show you that I can walk as straight as any of you. Halloa, driver, pull up!"

We'll take that for granted, Burton. But if you are determined to go, you must at least take a plain soda, and give your head a souce in cold water."

"Nothing of the sort. You've intimitated that I am drunk, and I' prove to you that I am not. I shall go into Miss Aberdeen's presence, and she will not notice any change in me what-

They had to yield.

When before all those present he raised her hand to his lips, and said-"Mabel, I s'lute you!" She blushed scarlet, and then turned white. It was the first time she had had oceasion to blush for him; and for the first time she was stricken with fear for him and for herself.

Ten years with their changes have come and gone !

We pass from the fashionable thoroughfare down a disreputable street, through a filthy alley, up four flights of rickety stairs to an attic. Through the small dingy panes of glass, where they are not broken and stuffed with rags to keep out the cold, you can see only chimney-tops and roofs covered with snow. In a small, badly-cracked stove, supported by two iron legs and a pile of broken bricks, there are a few coals over which a woman is trying to cook something in a saucepan. They do not give out warmth enough to dispel the icy chill of the room, and the woman shivers while she huddles as close as possible to the scant heat. Perhaps it was because she was so wretchedly clad, and so thin and wan. Want and sorrow were stamped on every lineament of the wasted frame and face. Her very hair seemed to hang gaunt or her cheeks. Every once in a while she looked towards a corner of the room where stood a tumble-down bedstead. Her attention was attracted by the coughing of a boy eight or nine years of age, yet so wasted by privation that he was almost a little skeleton. Out of his great liquid eyes looked starvation. "Mamma, I'm so cold," he said, in a shrill, piping voice. "Hush, dearest! Don't speak so loud. Huddle up close to papa. I'll have you something warm in a minute." The child looked to the other side of the bed where a man lay in a drunken

Gathering the ragged bedclothes more am at a loss to know what influenced closely about his shivering, little form, but moving no nearer to the man, the child said in a hoarse whisper-

"Mamma, I'm afraid!"

At that the woman straightened up, her heart swelling almost to bursting. With the hard tearlessness of despair her eyes rested on the man, then sought he would so far modify his opinion as to the child, and last returned to the man, and from her quivering lips arose the invocation-

"Halloa? there! Have you got something for me to eat?" he demanded. "No, dear, not a mouthful!" said the woman, in a pleading voice, hastily setting the saucepan beneath the stove. "What's that you say? Are you lying to me? I can smell something you've been cooking. What is that you are

"James, it is only a little broth for Harry. Remember he is sick, and has had nothing to eat since yesterday."

The anguish-wrung words fell from her lips in piteous, pleading tones that must have moved anyone not insane with liquor.

"Confound you and your child," cried the man, "you do nothing but coddle him, and he does nothing but whine. Why don't you send him out to work, or beg? He's old enough to. But no, he must sit in the house, feeding on dainties, while I starve! You never have a mouthful for me. Bring that saucepan here!"

"James, the child is starving! Look at him !" cried the mother in despair. With an oath the man got up and approached the grate.

"Husband, you must not take it. Oh, you cannot. Our child is dyingdying of hunger, and this is all that I have!"

"We'll see what I can do. Stand aside, I tell you."

"No, no; you shall not have it." With an oath he struck her to the floor, and picking up the saucepan, deliberately ate its contents.

"We'll see who's master in this house," said the brute. "That's only a beginning. Now this brat has got to go out and beg. He's played the drone his eyes with a smile that a siren might long enough. Here, sir; come out of

> And seizing the frightened child by the shoulder, he dragged him forth. "James, James! what are you going to do?" screamed the mother, throwing herself on her knees, and catching her child in her arms. "Take him out to the street corner and make him beg.'

"No, no; the child will freeze to death. He is already sick and starving. You shall not take him out into the cold-you shall not !" Desperately she clung to the boy, while his father wrenched at his arm, until the child fainted with fright and Then with an oath at his weakness, the father hurled the limp body back

"Have you got any money?" he de-

"No, James. The last penny went to buy the broth of which you deprived our starving child. On, my husband, how could you?"

"I wonder if these things would fetch anything in the pawnshop?" And he tossed over the ragged bed-clothes to find something that would bring the price of a single drink. "The whole lot wouldn't fetch a shilling," he growled, and walked out of the room, slamming the rickety door angrily. Then the mother rose with her unconscious boy, and laid him on the bed,

There was a terrible look on her face as she drew from a closet a pan of charcoal, and set it on the stove. With an icy calm she walked about the room, stuffing rags in all the crevices, and when this was done, ignited the She bent over the child to take a last look-a look of devouring love and pity. She kissed lip, brow, and emaciated

Then she laid down and gathered him to her heart.

"God cannot judge me harshly for "It will end his misery this," she said. and mine."

But a throb of anguish convulsed her, as she thought that she would never see her child again in this world, never hear his voice, never feel the clasp of his arms, nor the touch of his lips.

As if her close clasp awakened him. he moved and cried-"Mamma! mamma!"

Then the poisonous vapors that arose from the charcoal seemed to clear away, and the voice became more distinct, resolving itself into the words-

"Mabel! Mabel! What is the matter with you?"

Mabel Aberdeen shook off the nightmare that held her in thrall.

She was no longer a starving wretch courting death for herself and child, but a young lady in the full bloom of health and happiness, surrounded by every luxury. And it was only cousin Grace she held in such a convulsive grasp, while she trembled from head to foot, and a cold perspiration oozed from every pore in her body.

And this was New Year's morning, and James Burton, no wrecked drunk ard, but her noble James, so strong and so good, would be there; and she was Cuticura Remedies, to decide whether he should drink wine or cafe noir!

August Flower. The immense sale and great popularity of Green's August Flower in all towns and villages in the civilized world has caused many imitators to adopt similar names expecting to reap a harvest for themselves at the expense of the afflicted. This Medicine was introduced in 1868, and for the cure of Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, with their effects, such as Sour Stomach Costiveness, Sick Stomach, Sick Headache Indigestion, Palpitation of the Heart vertigo, etc., and it never has failed to our knowledge. three doses will relieve any case of Dyspepsia. Two million bottles sold last year. Price 75 cents. Samples

THE SUPPLY DEPOT of the entire bodily economy is the stomach. There it is that the manufacture of blood goes on and upon activity of the great digestive organs depends in a great measure the well-being of the system. If its functions are interrupted by dyspepsia, billiousness and constipation supervene, the blood becomes meagre in quantity and poor in quality, the appetite impaired, nervous symptoms manifest themselves and there is a loss of flesh and vigor. As a means of stimulating and invigorating the stomach and remedying the above deplorable state of things, Northrop & Lyman's Quinine Wine may be confidently relied upon by debilitated, dyspeptic, and nervous sufferers. Not only is it a tonic of great and certain merit, but a most agreeable one. Its flavor is unexceptionable and it contains no ingredients that can prove harmful to any one using it. It proves most effacious in remedying weakness and nervousness when the directions are strictly adhered to. As an anti-periodic, it possesses great excellence. Chills and fevers, billious remittent fever, and the minor malarial complaints, dumb ague and ague cake, are eradicated by it. and the system fortified against their return. It is an article which bears a timehonored reputation, and has proved its efficacy in numberless cases well calculated to put the remedial value of any remedy to a crucial test. Refreshing sleep, increased muscular force a gain in flesh and mental cheerfulness are among the blessings which it confers.
