Leap Year Proposals.

"Charlie, I do think it's a shame for a good-looking, likely fellow like you to insist upon remaining a bachelor. It's a duty you owe to society in general and yourself and some pretty girl in Jemima, who ignoring the two appliparticular to get married."

Aunt Julia looked very severely over hands. her spectacles at her refractory nephew, but that individual only gave his six that you was sick, and if there is any feet of humanity a more luxurious turn in the large easy arm-chair and laughed. "Yes, that is the way you always do. It's a poor compliment to the sex to live for nearly a year in the same house with such a charming girl as your cousin Ella, and not fall in love with her."

"I know it, aunt Julia. I consider myself a lucky fellow to be privileged to enjoy her society; but I don't care to shoulder the responsibility of dressmakers' and milliners' bills just yet."

"You mercenary scamp! You know Ella's not in the least extravagant; and young Thompson won't be coming here much longer without declaring his sentiments. I won't stand in her way for a moment, either; but I had set my heart npon forming this match between you and her."

"There's no telling what may happen yet, Aunt Julia; so put off that solemn countenance, do, and look a little cheer-

"There'll be abundant reason for you to look solemn before long, let me tell you, sir. Are you aware that this is leap year ?"

"Quite aware, Auntie. I realize the hourly jeopardy in which I stand ; but a week has now gone by in serenity, and I begin to have hopes; perhaps I am one of the more fortunate ones whom nobody wants."

"Don't delude yours'elf that way. There are any quantity of determined spinsters who would not let a chance to secure a rich young husband slip through the ir fingers.'

"Ha—ha—ha! how nice it is to be appreciated. Suppose that you suggest to Ella to assert her prerogative in my

"No, sir! Ella's not one of that kind; but since you are so incorrigible I shall leave you to your fate, for Ella and I are going out."

"Oh, aunt Julia! can you deliberately desert me like this?" laughed Charlie with a mock deprecating air. "Yes I can. And if you find yourself saddled with an old shrew of a spinster you'll have only yourself to blame!" and aunt Julia relentlessly decamped, while Charlie threw himself back in the chair with a yawn. "Ah, ha! a pretty prospect for me, to be sure! Ella is a little treasure, but somehow I can't bring myself to the sticking point of a proposal, not not even in the face of this dread alternative. However, I've no fear of having my peace of mind disturbed this afternoon, for I don't believe any of the fair creatures know that I'm laid up for a day or two with this unfortunate ankle of mine; and by evening Aunt Julia will be back again, and I can retreat for protection behind her ample skirts, if necessary." Our hero was deep in the delights of solitude and "Pickwick," when a decisive ring at the bell made him start a little ner-yously. "Hallo! I wonder who this is? Some of the fellows, I suppose, come to commiserate me on my misfortune. I'll know in a minute, though.'

The minute elapsed; a murmur of voices was heard in the hall, and then as the parlor door opened, Charlie turned to look around.

A tall bony figure, with an erect bearing and determined air, with her features concealed by a veil, advanced to his chair, and raised her veil, revealing a thin, hatchet for "This is Mr. Charles Sherman, I believe?" she enquired.

"You are right, madam," Charlie answered heroically. "Excuse my not rising as I have a lame ankle." "I'll take a seat if you have no objec-

"None in the least, madam," Charlie pretended yawn.

"My name is Meggs, sir. We never had a formal introduction, but I know your name and reputation pretty well; and I called around, seeing it was leap year, and I heard you was home, to make you an offer. I believe I am the first one, here ain't I?"

"I believe you are, madam," replied our hero gravely.

"All right. Well, I've got a little money laid by as well as you, and we might as well unite our hearts and fortunes. . What do you say?"

"Well really madam," Charle answered, beginning to feel a little nonplussed, one might say a good many things to such a-

"You might have spared yourself that trouble !" interrupted Miss Meggs, my darling; your help to make my you've 'come to' just half an hour too life the happiest on earth. You know late. I was here first."

"I've nothing to fear from your rivalry," snapped the other; "Mr. Sherman is a gentleman of sufficient taste and acuteness to make a proper selection, and I can guess pretty correctly what it would be !"

"Which means that it couldn't be any other than Sarah Stone, of course! Well your guess is wrong for once, I am happy to state." "You're in too great a hurry to be tion of Dr. A Boschee, a celebrated Gerhappy, then, retorted Miss Stone quick- man Physician, and is acknowledged to ly; "I'll hear Mr. Sherman's sentiments | be one of the most fortunate discoveries in from himself, if you please. and not Medicine. But before our bewildered hero could summons at the outer door had been unheard through the din. "Mr. Sherman, my sister, Miss Rosanna Myers," said one. "Mr. Sherman, my sister, Miss Lucinda Myers," said the other.

"Two at once, eh?" groaned Charlie under his breath; "the saints preserve us, this is gesting desperate!" "I came this afternoon, Mr. Sherman, to offer you true connubial bliss in the possession of my dear sister Lucinda," cegan Rosanna. "And I to urge dear Rosanna's claims

Miss Jemima. "Such a sweet disposition; the very qualities for a wife !" recommended Lu-

"You'll have a perfect treasure of neatness in Lucinda," smiled Rosanna. "Rosanna's a splendid hand at doing up shirts and collars." Lucinda'll keep your house like a new pin, she's so domestic."

"Charlie Sherman, send them away; be advised by your friends," interposed Meggs, remember my prior claim.

"Oh, save me from my friends," groaned Charlie; "aunt Julia was right and how to get rid of these creatures is more than I know!" then as a happy Spruce, thought flashed across his mind, he extended his hands and said :

"Ladies, ladies, if you'll listen a moment I'll answer you all: "Of course you will?" exclaimed Laths, Miss Meggs triumphantly; "speak out boldly Charlie, don't be afraid. What do you want to say ?" "This: you're all a little too late!

I'm already engaged !" "Already engaged!" shrieked the applicants in chorus; "and here you've been wasting our valuable time and Nelson, September, 14, '80. holding out false hopes. We'll have satisfaction, see if we don't!"

"It'll be a sorry disclosure for you, Charlie Sherman!" threatened Miss Meggs; I'll appeal to the law, and see if that won't bring you to terms! "And so will I! 'and I! exclaimed the others, "and you'll have a breach of promise, case to stand, sir, for this!' and w'th wrathful looks and menacing gest ures they filed from the room, whi', e our hero hid his face in his hands w ith a des. pairing groan.

"Oh! replied Ella, with a roguish Lace, lighted keen grey dimple, "what can it possibly be!" "Ella , you know it's leap year, and the pri vilege of proposing is invested in the, fair sex. Do ask me if I'll have you ! I want so much to say 'yes.' " "You do? well' I'll delegate the privi-legge to you, for this time!" "You darling, will you marry me?" "That depends. I must know the nature of that promise, first." answered, hiding a glimpse behind a "Well, Ella, I've been besieged by the most awful lot of creatures this afternoon, as candidates for matrimony, and the only way I could temporarily get rid of them was by asserting that I was already engaged. Will you make to the public that he intends to give his sole attention to the that assertion good, darling?" Then Ella burst into a ringing peal of laughter. "Well, I declare, so that was the meaning of that groan, and all those wry faces! I came in about fifteen minutes ago to find 'Pickwick' on the floor, and you fast asleep; and while I was watching you wondering what made you scowl so ominously, you groaned, and then the ordeal of leap year, eh. Ha, ha,

"What!" echoed Charlie, in bewilderment, "you don't mean to say that I've been asleep and dreamt it all?" "I do? 'a guilty conscience, etc., you know, and Jane declares that there have been no callers this afternoon. "Good afternoon, sir," she said, ad- So you're not compromised at all, and there is no need of my help.'

"There isn't," exclaimed Charlie, catching her hand. "I've learned Lime Juice, Vinegar, what a treasure you are, at last, and I'm determined to call that treasure my own, I want your help more than ever, I love you; I hope you care for me; you won't refuse me this?"

"'No I wont Charlie!" said Ella, relenting; and Aunt Julia entered just in time to give her blessing and congratulate herself upon the happy result produced through the agency of leap year proposals.

A Good Thing.

German Syrup is the special prescripnature, removing, as it does, the cause of the affection and leaving the parts in a strong and healthy condition. It is not an experimental medicine, but has stood the test of years, giving satisfaction in every case, which its rapidly increasing sale every season confirms. Two million bottles sold annually. Beware of medicines of similar names, lately introduced.
