TOM.

BY MARY KYLE DALLAS. "Mrs. Hacker and her daughter sat in the little parlor behind the shop taking tea. It was a frosty winter night. and the brown teapot was kept on the back of the stove that it might not chill. So was the pan of sausages, which tasted all the more crisp and savory in consequence. The door between the store and the room stood open that any chance customer might be seen at once by the tea drinkers, but the bell had not jingled since they took their seats. .

"Trade is dreadful, Emma Jane," said Mrs. Hacker, dipping her bread into the sausage pan and transferring it to her plate by means of the long cooking fork. "Trade is dreadful! I should just give up if it got a little worse; but, dear me, I never had any luck in any thing. There's Mr. Ninnever putting plate glass-whole panes-into his windows, and beginning to talk of hiring the second floor for ready-made suits; and my things hang on my hands, though I'm sure I make better selections than he knows how to. Another cup, Emma Jane-what a comfort tea is, to be sure." "Then give me a cup, won't you, Mrs. Hacker?" said a voice behind them. "I want comfort, I'm sure. Here's grandma gone out and forgot to leave the key, and nothing for me to do but to sit on the stairs and cool my heels. "Thomas! la! how you scared m coming in so sudden!" screamed Emma

"Sit down, do," said Mrs. Hacker. "Take your seat here, Tom, and have your supper with us. Your grandma stopped in to tell me she wouldn't be back until late, and the key is in the money-drawer."

"About all there is there, too," sa Emma Jane, with a pout; "and I want a new winter bonnet." "Look here, Mrs. Hacker," said the young man slowly turning himself to ward the old lady. "Look here ma'am; here's some one ready and willing to buy that winter bonnet, and all the other bonnets Emma Jane will ever want We've been engaged a year now, and at last I've got to be foreman in the factory. Why should we put it off any longer? Tell Emma Jane that it's all nonsense. She won't listen to me."

"Well, I don't think long engagements are best," said Mrs. Hacker. "What I should say to Emma Jane would be, 'have him now.'"

"Oh, well! I suppose I shall bothered until I do say yes" replied Emma Jane; and then the anxious lover pleading his cause earnestly, the wedding day was actually set for Christmas Eve, which was at that time about a month off.

This conversation, as well as the evening meal being over, Mrs. Hacker discreetly retired to the shop and left the lovers alone. However, she did not stay away long. In a few moments she came running in with her glasses on her nose, and an open letter in her

"Read this, one of you," she said "I've read it, but I can't believe I understand it. It seems as though I must be crazy. Here, you read it, Thomas; I have more confidence in you."

Then she put the letter into Thomas Hunt's hand and sat down at the table. "I found it on the floor," said she. "The postman must have thrown it in at the slit. I don't know whether it's a hoax or not, but its got a regular stamp on, an' all. My gracious, how queer I feel."

Meanwhile, Thomas Hunt solemnly placed the sheet of paper before him, read it through, and turned back to the first line.

"It isn't a hoax," said he. It's regular lawyer's letter, and what it tells you is that your old uncle, Simon Hacker, of London, England, is dead, and you are his heiress to the tune of one hundred thousand dollars. It's down in pounds, but that's the sum in our money."

"Pinch me! Emma Jane," cried Mrs. Hacker. I mean it, dear; and if I don't to her. wake up, I'll think it is true."

"Oh, psha! ma! It is true enough," cried Emma Jane. "How splendid. When are we to have the money? Oh !: isn't it just lovely."

But Thomas gave a little sigh. "Mrs. Hacker," he said, maybe you think a mechanic not rich enough or fine enough for your daughter, now you are as well off as that. If so, say so out and out, and I'll bear it as well as

"Why, Thomas, if I was a queen, she deserved her punishment, and she I'd think you a good son-in-law," said Mrs. Hacker.

"And you, Emma?" said Thomas. "I shall wait until I get my diamonds on before I take airs," said his lady love. Nevertheless the fortune made a change in the programme. It was ne-

"I'll wait, Emma," replied Tom "Ah, but-but you see it might be no use," said Emma. "Perhaps I never may want to marry; and if you don't mind taking back the ring, why we can be friends all the same."

"Can we?" said Tom, in a strange tone. "Well, I shall never be your clared

And he put the ring into his vest pocket; but he did not trouble the servant to open the door of the big house the day." "What ails Tom, Emma Jane," asked

Jane, if ever it spoiled a woman." "Don't be cross, ma," coaxed Emma 'Tom is very well, but he is common and you know how elegant young Mr. Vreeland is, and-and he pays me a great deal of attention, ma."

"Ah, that's it," sighed old Mrs. Hack er. "He's cut Thomas Hunt out. You've jilted the poor boy."

And now Vreeland came often to see Emma Jane, was her escort everywhere, drove her out, walked with her, sang sentimental songs with his eyes fixed on her face, and did all that might be done to show "what his intentions were." And a year from the day on which Mrs. Hacker took possession of her new house, she was not surprised by hearing that Mr. Vreeland desired to see her

"Yes, I'll go to see him, my dear," said Mrs. Hacker, putting on her best cap at the glass; "but I can't help thinking of poor Tom."

Mr. Vreeland sat in the parlor in exactly the proper attitude, wearing the proper dress, and properly excited—no more. He informed the old lady that he had lost his heart to her daughter, and that as he believed he had found favor in that young lady's eyes, desired to have her permission to set the wedding-day.

And Mrs. Hacker listened calmly, and answered thus:

"Mr. Vreeland, I think you are what they call a very good match for Emma Jane, and I've nothing against you. It shall be as she chooses. Only it's but fair to tell you this. You must take her for herself, for in a week's time we shall leave this house' and I shall go back to my little shop,. I've been speculating, and, well, you know how things

"Yes, I know," replied young Vreeland. He turned pale as death as he spoke, and sat looking down at the car,

After awhile he said:

"Accept my condolences," and arose and bowed himself out of the front door. An hour afterwards Emma Jane, to whom her mother had told the same story of speculation and loss, received a note, which the Vreeland's black ser- T E A. ant had brought to the door. It ran

"My DARLING EMMA: You know I adore and must adore you forever; but my habits are extravagant. My father, like your mother, has entered into disastrous speculations, and I will not bind you to a marriage which could result in nothing but misery. Your's ever in deep despair, REGINALD VREELAND." Ah, it was all like a dream to Emma. They went back to the old house, and the shop was opened again. The dirty boxes were brushed, the counter oiled, the pins and buttons, and striped blue elastic, and boxes of cheap thimbles, and the card-board mottoes stamped for working in silk, graced the glass case

The same limited number of customers dropped in, and Emma served behind the counter, and washed the dishes in the back room. She was very, very wretched, and life looked dark, indeed,

Old Mrs. Hunt and Thomas still lived on the upper floor. The old grandmother told Mrs. Hacker that she thought Tom was beginning to like Fanny Earle, the hair-dresser's pretty daughter. Sometimes Tom would pass the window, but he never looked toward it.

Emma used to sit behind the counter thinking of him. What a lover she had had, and she had cast him away for a fortune-hunter. Her verdict was that was very sad and very meek. She expected nothing now but to die an old maid, living behind that little shop counter, and never having any admiration or attention again.

In this mood she sat beside her mother one winter evening. The table was spread with the thick stone china; cessary for Mrs. Hacker to go to Eng- the brown tea-pot and the pan of land, and Emma Jane must go with sausages hissed on the stove. The door her. she said; and, on the whole, it stood open between the shop and the seemed best to postpone the wedding parlor.
