Butt and Parnell.

heap of threads tangled and broken, an interesting scrap-book full of noteworthy odds and ends, a piece of elegantly-tessellated mosaic, but lacking in a purpose and a plan. Mr. Parnell may be less brilliant, but they know not the man who suppose him less able to carry out the work he has taken in hand. As a political tactician, he is of the first water; his honesty and disinterestedness have already been tested by political fire of no ordinary intensity and he has manifested a tenacity and determination of purpose unexampled by any other Irish political leader. It chiefly to these qualities exercised by Mr. Parnell that the Irish party has not only preserved its unity, but has actually become a parliamentary party. The weakness of Ireland, the very salt of her disasters, has ever been the want of harmony among her people, and her parties. It is not the least of Mr. Parnell's merits that he seeks to win to his side the sympathy of English Liberalism; and assuredly this must be secured before Ireland gets what is her due. The mission to settle the Irish question by constitutional means falls naturally to the Liberal party; but the English people have yet to be instructed on the most rudimentary matters respecting the real nature of Ireland's political wants. At present Irish history, Irish literature, Irish life, and Irish newspapers, are almost unknown on this side of the Channel; and in general the English public know only that an Irish agitation has been going on after the constabulary have interfered. In Mr. Butt's time, the head of the Irish organization was, as the saying goes, good; but the tail was exceedingly weak. It is otherwise now, for the present leader of the Home-rule party has associated with him men of marked ability : nor is it the least of their qualifi-

do little toward real education. It is very hard to decide just when school days should begin, but do not send your little ones from home, especially to a crowded school, only to keep the house quiet; and if a child begs for a holiday, consider before you refuse it. The little brain may need rest, the little body exercise, and a brief visit at grandma's in the country, or a good long walk with you, or perhaps just a little idleness, might save your child's brain or spine from disease. Where teachers have fifty or a hundred children in a class, they cannot watch each individual member; the mother should do that. And even the child who loves to go to school should now and then have a holi day, when its brain is becoming overwork ed, aside from those which the school

He thought that if the consumption of Piver's ox-marrow pomade was so world-wide, a pomatum made from buffalo marrow would also prove a success. He, therefore, obtained to produce it at, and he will not only be from the far west several tons of this new article of export and shipped it to Paris. The well known perfumer wrote back that he held the consignment at his, the shipper's, disposal as, owing to the presence of margarine, marrow could not be used for the purpose, and that nothing but pure Russian tallow entered the com position of ox-marrow pomade. now marrow from being improperly employed as a lubricator of youthful locks of properly cleansing the system in the has become a lubricant of the staff of would respectfully announce that he is prepared to give MUSIC LESSONS on very reasonable dangerous competitor for the ordinary lates and promptly. The article which brings 30 cents per lb. should cost no more to make than that which is worth half that price. At the present moment the manufacture of "Snene" and oleomargarine receive unusual encouragement because of the high price of fine creamery butter, and butter quoted now from 16 to 20 cents at wholesale has much to fear from such substitutes, especially butters of different grades and originally packed in various shapes which are repacked uniformly, salted and otherwise prepared chiefly by means of "Walker's Butter Worker," to suit the home and export markets. The only preventive for the substitution of oleomargarine for butter in the general consumption is im-Mr. Butt's whole life has been estimated, provement in the making. Commerce. The Cunning of the Fox.

Some fishermen on the west coast of Ireland were in the habit of going to a small island, a few hundred yards from the mainland, in quest of bait. The island was inhabited by large numbers of rabbits, and could be reached at low tide by wading, the water then being only a few inches deep. One morning they went in their boat quite early, it being high tide, and on landing saw a dead fox lying on the beach. The fur of the animal was all bedraggled, and he seemed to have been drowned. One of the men remarking that his skin was worth something pitched him into the boat. Procuring their bait they returned to the mainland, and the man who had possessed himself of the fox seized him by the tail and flung him on shore. As soon as the animal struck the beach he picked himself up with considerable agility for a dead fox, and shot off like a flash among the cliffs, while the men stood staring at each other in mute astonishment. The men concluded that he had crossed over to the island during the night, when the tide was low, in search of rabbits, and finding in the morning that he was cut off from the mainland, counterfeited death with the expectation of thereby procuring a passage to the shore in the boat -an expectation which was fully realized

It may, therefore, be taken for granted that in the case of a joiner whose business is not sufficiently extensive to warrant him in laying down an extensive timates for the joinery work he requires in any contract he may have on hand from the various large joinery establishments situated all over the country.
