How Silas got Margorie.

BY MARY KYLE DALLAS.

When Robin Sperry went down to Luckden to preach he had only one old friend there, but he made a great im- you see the pitcher." And she handed pression on his hearers, and in the him a glass. "revivals" that followed his arrival, a great many very singular things were contemptuously. "Well, boys and reported of him-amongst others, that | girls and women and dominies like it, I he had driven the devil out of old suppose. How's religion comin' on ! James Barrow, the notorious drunkard | Pretty brisk?" of the place; and the people had seen him—the devil—run down the hill and jump into the lake. The truth of the matter was that Robin was an earnest and yet a somewhat sensational young the church was filled as it had not been for years. Walking home in the evening after one of the brightest meetings of the course, arm-in-arm with his college friend, Silas Weld, Robin heard more of what was reported of him than he had before.

"I am sorry," he said. I think such things hurt religion, and also hurt the preacher of whom they are said."

"You are not hurt by it yet, anyhow," said Silas. "Margorie does not believe in this nonsense, but she calls you the best preacher she ever heard. "She's very kind, I'm sure," said the young minister. "Who is she?" "She's the girl I'm engaged to, Robin," said Silas. "You must have noticed her. She's the prettiest girl in the place. She sits in the third pew on the right, and wears a purple velvet hat with tea roses in it."

"Oh, yes, I've seen her," Robin; "and she a very pretty girl, indeed; and so that's Margorie!"

said Silas, "but her father and I are this evening. Will you go with me?" "It's late for a call-half-past nine," said Robin.

"No doubt," replied Silas; "but have to go when I can. Her father is away to-night. There's a meeting of the Agricultural Association at the hotel. They generally stay until midnight; so this is my time."

"Yon are responsible for the hour," said Robin. "I shall not say anything more about it. Take me, if you think best, or leave me, if you think better, when we get to the door; we have been with each other."

"Oh! I want you to know Margorie," said Silas; and so, with much more talk, he led his friend, by certain roads and lanes, to the door of a substantial farm-house, through the windows of which cheerful lights were visi-

"I think it's likely she's in the sitting-room," said Silas, opening a gate which led through the orchard, and making his way to a low door, shaded by a porch, at which he knocked in rather a peculiar manner; and in an instant the door flew open, and there stood Margorie herself, a pretty picture, with the lamp-light glinting on her golden hair.

"Margorie," said the young man, ed: "I have brought Robin Sperry to see you. Miss Garnet, Mr. Sperry."

"I am very glad to see you, Mr. Sperry," said Margorie-"very glad. Walk in, please. Silas, I'm glad to see you, you know; but pa will not be late to-night; he said so. Pa is a little peculiar, Mr. Sperry. He was a sea the three-acre meadow, and my mother him so," and he isn't very friendly yet Mrs. Weld, his ma." to Silas."

"Then he'll not think me rude if I say, don't stay long," said Margorie. "Pa would be glad to have you call on him, Mr. Sperry," added Margories your opinion of Silas?" "He admires to hear you preach; and so do I."

"Thank you," said Robin. "I think it is very kind of you to tell me

"It's such a pleasant change," said Margorie; "such a pleasant change from Mr. Graham, poor old gentleman! who had lost all his teeth and never had any ideas. It's wicked not to go to church, you know, but what a trial it used to be. I've enjoyed it so much since you came, Mr. Sperry.'

Robin said, "Thank you" again; and they sat together around the firethe first of the season—and talked very pleasantly. Margorie was hospitable, and cider and doughnuts, which neither of the young men was yet fastidious enough to despise, were brought from the store-room. Robin told Margorie that should he permanently settle in the place, his mother would come to keep house for him. And Margorie declared that she should be very glad.

"I love elderly ladies," she said, "and you know I haven't any one, mother, aunt, or grandmother. I hope your mother will like me."

Robin said that he knew she would, and he thought also that it would be well for Margorie if she had such a wise counsellor; and over the cider and cakes they fell to talking very pleasantly and merrily. In the midst of this a slow clumping on the broad path of the road became audible. Suddenly the pleasant chat was interrupted. Margorie clasped her plump hands, and Silas turned red.

"It is pa," whispered Marjorie. "Oh, I told you he'd be early, Silas. Hide yourself. Run into the storecloset-run. Poor pa has been taking too much hard cider-I know it by his walk. He always does at the agricultural meeting. He'll stop at nothing. Hide yourself - hide in the storecloset."

"You see, Robin," said Silas, doubtfully, "he promised to kill me if he found me in his house again-and Marjorie is nervous about it-come." "Thank you," said Robin, "go yourself if you like." And Margorie, who had never ceased wringing and clasping her hands, pushed Silas into the closet, and turned to face her father, who now stumped in with irregular steps, and with a face as red as one of his own prize beets after a good boiling. "Oh, pa," she cried, hypocritically, "how nice and early you are! And here is the minister waiting to see you." "How do you do, dominie?" said funded. Large profits. Address, Mr. Garnet. "Proud I'm sure. Been to the agricultooral meetin'.

of my yearly dooties. Sit down ; sit down. Glad to see you. Fill your glass. I mean get out something to eat and drink, Marjorie."

"I have pa," said Marjorie. "Don't

"Sweet cider!" said Mr. Garnet.

Robin answered as best he could, and cast an anxious glance toward the store-

"Sit down. Sit down, dominie," said Mr. Garnet. Make yourself at preacher, and that he had set people home. I've wanted to talk to you a thinking. But talking and exaggera- good while. They say you can drive tion went on, and the rumor grew, and the devil out of folks. Now tell me. how does he get into 'em? Tell me

Mr. Garnet was very far from sober, and Robin thought it best to humour

"When Satan enters a man's heart, it is through sin, of course," he said. "What kind of sin?" asked Mr. Garnet, in thick tipsy voice.

"Many. Murder, theft, lying, and drunkenness amongst others," said

"Look here, young man," said Mr. Garnet, trying to rise, "I've got plenty of hard cider aboard, I know. Now if Satan is in me, drive htm out. I want too see him. Come now; go at it. I'm a good Methodist."

"I think I had better take my leave. Miss Garnet," said Robin. But before the words were out of his lips, the door of the store-closet opened softly, The lamp was suddenly blown out; a smell of brimstone filled the room, and an awful figure stood before them. Silas had possess-"We're very fond of each other," ed himself of a box of matches, dampened the ends, and rubbed them over his face and hands, and with two more bunches blazing in his hands stood before the horrified Mr. Garnet, his head tied up in a silk handkerchief and a table-cloth draping his shoulders.

> "You want to see me, here I am," ne said in hollow tones. "You reprobate, look at me."

> Margorie shrieked; Robin stood bewildered; old Mr. Garnet sank on his

"Oh, dominie, keep him away," he cried. "Oh, what am I to do?" "Soften your hard heart," said Silas

'Don't drink so much cider, and let friends too long not to be quite frank your daughter marry the man of her choice, or I'll come and fetch you next Christmas;" and, flourishing the flaming matches, he dashed out of the door. "Get up, Mr. Garnet," said Robin. 'Get up, sir; sit in this chair. Miss Garnet, will you light the lamp? Be calm, be calm !" and he held the old man's hand in his.

> "Dominie," gasped Mr. Garnet, you won't raise him again! There, don't speak ; listen : Why do you suppose he came?" Robin was very wrong; he confessed this afterward, but he was very young also, and in love himself with a girl who was far away, and Silas was his friend; and instead of making an explanation of the facts he merely answer-

"I think he told you himself why he

"Lknow it isn't right to drink too much. I'll swear off," said Mr. Garnet. "But about letting Margorie have Silas Weld, why, his grandfather and my father, they went to law about captain once, and I think that makes used to say she'd no opinion at all of

"They are all dead, I believe," said "I've explained that to Robin," said Robin; "all gone to their account." "Yes," said Mr. Garnet. "Yesthat's true. A year—the old boy said he'd fetch me in a year, if I didn't let Silas have Margorie. Dominie, what's "He will be good to your daughter," said Robin. "1-I-" Oh, how wrong he was again. He repented it, in sackcloth and ashes; but he finished the sentence with: "If I were you, Mr. Garnet, after what you have seen, I would not tempt

A week from that day, Mr. Garnet surprised the temperance lodge by taking the pledge, and shortly after Margorie and Silas were married.

It surely was not his fault, but the young minister's fame was greatly increased by a report that he had driven Satan out of old Mr. Garnet, and the temporary sojourn which a Methodist minister makes in any place was a pleasant one for Luckden and for himself. Over and over again he told himself that he had been accessory to a very disgraceful sort of trick, utterly unworthy of his dignity; but Silas and Margorie were happy, and old Ma Garnet a temperate man, and Robin

'THE ORGUINETTE may now be called a celebrated instrument. In tone it is akin to the Cabinet Organ, but the organ must be n anipulated by an artist in order to produce music; the Or-GUINETTE is on the other hand entirely mechanical in its action, and at trifling expense it can be made to furnish an unlimited supply of all kinds of music."—Toronto Globe.

"THE ORGUINETTE is indeed a musical wonder. It is a miniature reed organ, with as strong and melodious a tone as the Cabinet Size. It surpasses the Cabinet Organ, for the reason that the ignoramus in music can play it as well as the most accomplished professor. The Orguinette is strong and accurate in its mechanism, and consequently not liable to get out of order."—Montreal "THE ORGUINETTE is the most perfect automatic musical instrument yet invented, its repertoire is unlimited, the tone is remarkably good."—Montreal Star.
