The Lost Daughter.

BY MARY GRACE HALPINE. "All these are under two years," said the matron of the Bloomingville Orphanage, as she looked complacently around en the goodly array of babies of all sizes and complexions, ranged on either side of the long nursery.

There were babies, plump, rosy and good-natured, as all babies should be and pale, fretful, puny little creatures, who looked as if they were already disgusted with the life upon which they had entered; black, blue, and gray-eyed babies, and babies with eyes of very little color at all.

It would seem that the lady addressed, and who was desirous of obtaining one for adoption, would find no difficulty in suiting herself; but either she did not see what she was in search of or was too bewildered by so many rival claims to be able to make any choice. "Here is a very fine boy-baby," said the matron, pausing in front of a black eyed fellow, who sat on the knee of its nurse, sucking its fat thumb.

"Yes, but I want a girl, a blonde Some thing like this."

As the matron glanced at the photo graph that was handed her, which was that of a very lovely child of not more than two summers, she uttered an exc'amation of surprise.

"It is the picture of my little girl, said the lady, her eyes filling with tears, "who died a few weeks ago, and whose place I wish to fill, if such a thing be possible."

"We have a little girl in the hospital ward," said the matron, "who resem bles this picture so strongly that should think it was taken for her Both parents are dead, and, so far as can learn, there is no one to claim her.

The speaker led the way to a cheerful. sunny upper room, where on one of the little cots a beautiful child was sleeping. The resemblance to the picture was very strong, and to the bereaved mother seemed almost like a revelation from "Lilian, darling Lilian!" she cried bending over her. The child must have been dreaming of its mother: the fringed lids flew open revealing eyes, blue and wondrously bright, while the little arms went up, with an eager, fluttering motion. "Mamma!" Clasping the child to her heart the lady burst into tears, while the matron looked wonderingly from one to the

"She looks enough like you to be your own child." "She is my own child!" was the tearful response. "God is very good; He has had compassion on my loneliness and sorrow, and given my little Lilian

Blue-eyed, golden-haired Lilian Howard stood irresolutely at the door of her father's study; the color coming and going in the cheeks, and a look of fear and dismay in the sweet face that was never seen there before. The door being ajar, Mr. Howard heard her step, gentle as it was.

"Daughter." Mr. Howard looked gravely and tenderly into the pale, wistful face that confronted him.

"My child, you look as if you were summoned before a stern judge rather than a tender father, who would not knowingly deny you anything that would promote your true happiness." "You have always been very kind to me, papa_until___ said Lilian, roung into tears. "But, indeed. I can never be happy without Charlie !'s Taking his daughter's hand, Mr. Howard led her to a seat in the recess of one of the windows.

"Let us talk the matter over calmly. You are my only child, the pride and joy of my heart. I have given you every advantage that wealth can command, and feel that I have a right to expect you to do better than to marry a man with neither position nor means to support you in the style to which you have been accustomed. And your mother fully agrees with me."

But, papa, you always seemed to like Charlie until now. You never objected to his coming here, or my going out with him before." "I like him still; my personal feel ings have not changed towards him in the least. But I find his prospects are very different from what I thought they were. I supposed Mr. Haven to have no family, and thinking so much of the young man as he seemed to do. a distant relative and all, I thought that he would inherit the larger part of his property. But he tells me that he has a daughter, who will have every penny of it, which gives the matter quite a different complexion. It is little curious that much as he has been here, and as intimate as he has been with all of ua, that he never spoke of papa, who have so much?" let that end the matter."

Tying on her hat, Lilian went out for her usual walk; but not even the bright sunshine and bloom and verdure of that beautiful June day could make her heart less heavy. Her eyes sister, who bore the same name, and were so blinded by the tears that would odd-looking, middle-aged man who came hobbling along the narrow woodpath. Lilian looked into the kind, sympathizing face of the speaker.

"Oh! Mr. Haven, papa says that! can see Charlie only once more, and then only to tell him that we can never, never marry !" "Does he?" was the grim response.

"I think I shall have something to say about that. Do you love Charlie?" "Dearly."

"And you think he loves you?" "I'm sure of it."

shouldn't marry." Lilian opened her eyes widely.

obeying your father; that is about the very last thing that I should be likely to counsel you to do. But Charlie is poor, you know. I have a daughter, just about your age, who will inherit all my wealth. Do you think you could be happy in a small, plainly-furnished house, with neither servants, fine dresses, or any of the beautiful things to which you have been accustomed all

The golden lashes drooped until they ay quiveringly upon the flushed cheeks. "If Charlie were there." Mr. Haven's face betrayed strange and strong emotion. "Twenty years ago," he said tremu ously, "lips just as sweet spoke to me early the same words. As God lives, your life shall not be blighted as hers

"Cheer up, my child," he added leave the matter to me, and all will be well. I was on my way to your house when you met me. I am going to dine there to-day. Let us go back

Mr. and Mrs. Howard were too much accustomed to the vagaries of their wealthy and eccentric neighbour, to be any way surprised at his appearance. He had frequently dined with them in the same unceremonious fashion; his genial and kindly traits of character making him a great favorite with all the family.

Their after-dinner talk turning upon the improbability of a recently published story, Mr. Haven said:

"I will relate a story, as strange as any that can be found in what is called fiction, and which is strictly true:

"Sixteen years ago yesterday, as it stands upon the records of a certain orphan asylum in a distant State, a lady. young, fair and wealthy, went there for the purpose of obtaining a child to take the place of one she had just lost. one of the wards was a lovely little girl, whose parents had both been killed, as was supposed, in a railroad disaster, and who so strongly resembled her los derling, that her heart went out towards it at the first glance. She took it away with her, giving it her child's place and name, and her husband, who was absent at the time, has never once suspected that it was not the little one that he kissed at parting, and over whose grave the grass has been growing for many a year. Six months later the father of this child, who had recovered in a measure from the accident which had made him a cripple for life, called at the asylum to claim her, but only to Wines, learn that she had passed as completely out of his possession as if the grave had hidden her from his eyes. The death of a wealthy relative had raised him from poverty to affluence, and he spared neither money nor pains in his endeavors to find her. But the lady who had taken her from the asylum, having given a false name and address, all his efforts were fruitless, and it was not until after the lapse of some years, and by the merest chance, that he obtained a clew which led to the discovery of her whereabouts. She was then a blooming maiden of fifteen; the inmate of a beautiful and happy home, and the pride and darling of a man for whom he had a high esteem, and who believed her to be his own child. All the father's love sprang up in his lonely heart as he looked upon the sweet face that was the living picture of the wife he had so loved and mourned, but foreseeing the discord and unhappiness that the enforcement of his claims would occasion, he contented himself by locating where he could see her occasionally, and watch over her interests. But as time passed on, and she reached the age of eighteen, she proved to be her mother's daughter in heart, as well as form, bestowing it, as that mother did before her, on a man whose poverty was the only objection that could be brought against him. When he found that her happiness was to be sacrificed,

During the bustle and confusion that followed Mr. Haven went out upon the lawn, where he was joined, half an hour later, by Mr. Howard. After conversing together a few minutes, the two returned to the house, where they found Mrs. Howard and Lilian. Both had evidently been weeping, but the countenance of the former was composed, though very pale. "Mr. Haven," she faltered, "for the first time my husband knows that the child so dear to us both is akin to neither. But you are wrong if you think that I intended at first to deceive him. I was among strangers when my own baby died, and he on a business tour of several months' duration. The two were of nearly the same age, and strangely alike, and on perceiving that my husband saw no difference, I decided to wait until she had gained too strong "But why should you care for money a place in his heart to be easily dislodged; every week's delay making my "You are wrong, Lilian. Are now prepared to furnish their Best Quality Selected Lime By the Car Load at all STATIONS on the AL-BERT and INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAYS. This Lime differs from all other Brands in the market—having peculiar cement qualities, which hardens it like stone, and makes it imprevious to the action of water. It requires no cement to m-prove it, and is the CHEAPEST in the market for all purposes.

For Agricultural purposes it can be furnished by the car load in bulk, CHEAP, and is the best as
