On the contrary, he was very wretched, for he had just made sure that Ruth cared more for Ben. Barton than she did for him, and he was furious with jealousy. He had made up his mind to talk to Ruth that noontide, but the late assistant engineer had been taken ill and was at home, and the engine could know. nace on his face, might have been taken by a romantic stranger, peeping into the engine-room, for something almost demoniac, at that moment, but his heart was softening very much. He remembered the soft touch of Ruth's fingers on his brow, when he was ill-her cooing voice. "She can't be a false thing," he said, and he left his window and went to the other side of the room, and peeped through a crack in the boards. Thence he could see the court-yard and step-stones, and there sat Ruth alone, eating her dinner out of her little basket -alone waiting for him, perhaps.
