Mistress Betsy's Story.

Miss Lotty never should have married him, for she did not love him. But you see, they coaxed her into it; and then to a poor girl who had had hard work to get the bits of blue ribbon and imitation lace that she made herself pretty with, the idea of having all the money she could wish for was a temptation. We were all sitting about the fire one winter evening, for they made me quite one of the family when they were alone, and suddenly Miss Lotty spoke up.

"Mother," said she, "I'll have Squire Willis. You may tell him so to-morrow, if you like."

"Well, Lotty, you couldn't have a better husband," said the mistress, smiling.

"No I believe not," said Miss Lotty, looking into the fire. And you will live with us, and Betsy shall be housekeeper; he promised me that. He's a handsome man for his age, and they say one's husband ought to be the oldest.

"It always brings happiness," said my mistress. "Women fade so early. My mistress had had trouble of her own, for master was a gay flirt in his day, and she lost her hold on his heart very soon; but I couldn't see that a man of sixty was a suitable husband for a girl of twenty, for all that. I went up to Miss Lotty's room that night to brush her hair, and as I was doing it, I said:

"Miss Lotty, dear, don't leap before you look. Excuse an old servant, but have you quite forgotten young Robert Ross?"

"I hope so, for he has forgotten me," said she. And then she showed me a letter from abroad, in which one of her friends who was travelling told her that she had heard that Robert Ross was about to be married.

"I've heard it before," said Lotty, o "and we've never met for three years; that I pulled at it in vain, and I was In men's, Youth's and Boy's. This lot comprise so I might as well make my own happiness, even if I did care for Robert once. I don't want to work, and I hate to be poor, and mother will be so glad-so comfortable."

And I said no more. They were married, these two, and it was a great change for us; and I think Lotty was

She was loved and petted. Her mother was rid of all care, and everything would have been well, I verily believe, if Robert Ross had not come back. But come he did. Not married either; and he wrote a letter to my poor Miss Lotty-1 forget myself, she was Mrs. Willis now-that set her into a fine state of mind.

She told the squire she wasn't well, and he believed her, and had the doctor call, and he said it was nerves, and travel in Europe was the best thing for her; and the squire asked her if she'd like to go, and she said, "Very much, indeed, dear." So they began to prepare for the voyage.

It was a bright spring day, when, just about nine in the morning, the squire started for the town to buy some things they wanted. My young lady was better than usual that morning, and gayer. She dearly loved pretty things, and her handsome satchel and splendid new wraps, and the lace and linen, and the dressing-cases and glove boxes, all interested her. The squire was going to the jeweller's to get her a nice travelling watch. She had one, all enameled and set with diamonds, but it was too fine for a journey. And as he went out to the door, I ran after him, and I said to him: "Squire, if you please, wil you be good enough to take my cairngorm brooch with you to be mended? The pin is off, and it's the only thing I like to wear with my shawl."

So he nodded, and said: "Certain ly;" and I ran and fetched it; and he put it in his pocket and rode away. We never saw him again. Four hours after he was found dead in a lonely spot on the road, lying on his face. His horse had come home without him, and we had sent the men out to look for him, and were in an awful fright, as you may suppose, but we didn't expect anything quite so bad as that, for though ladies are often killed by falling from their horses, because of their long habits, men mostly get off with broken bones. Bu the poor squire was dead, and there was an inquest, and then the worst came, for the doctors proved, without a doubt, that he had been murdered-shot in the back of the head-and not for the sake of robbery either, for his money was all

My dead grandfather had left me the cairngorm brooch I told you of, so I ventured to ask if that was found. But no one had seen it, and it wasn't the time to trouble about my poor belongings; so I gave it up for lost.

My young lady was very much shocked; she cried a great deal, and wore very deep mourning; but she'd never been in love with the squire, and so after awhile, she cheered up, and in six month's time Robert Ross was courting her again, and in a year they were engaged to be married. I didn't like it. He was far from steady. She was a very rich widow-and widows, rich or poor, generally make fools of themselves when they marry a second time.

No, he wasn't steady, and he had queer, fierce ways that he never had had before, and I did not think as well of him as in those old days; but it was not my place to object. Besides, they were not going to be married very soon; the noise of the squire's murder had not died out yet, and the detectives were still following up a clew they said they had, and getting more money from the widow. Something was said about a rough fellow, with a gun in his hand, who had taken the train to the next town that dreadful day, and who had behaved oddly, and had a handkerchief tied half over his face.

But they were fond lovers, these two. Little notes and presents were always passing when they didn't meet each other for one or two days. She was always watching for him behind her curtains when he was expected, and I used to call myself an old fool for feeling the way I did to him. Yet the thoughts would not go away. I told mistress so, and she laughed and said

"I do not like you, Doctor Fell, The reason why I cannot tell,

But I don't like you Doctor Fell. not liking the medical gentleman, too, and the sciences are dragged in, one by personally selected in Montreal. but mistress was as set on the match one, to take their share in the fray."as my young lady was. Well, time Huxley.

went on, and at last the day was set, and one afternoon Mr. Robert Ross called me to him as he was going away,

"Betsy, I've got some old clothes down at my place, and if you know any one who would like to have them send him for them."

I said, "thank you, sir." And I bethought me that my own nephew might be glad to get some, but he wouldn't have asked for them for any money. So thinks I, I'll just go over and get | Choice Brands of LIQUORS, always kept them myself. And that evening took a clothes basket with me and went

Mr. Robert was just going out, but ne stopped and gave me the key. "They're on the floor of the closet near the mantle-piece," he said. "I'd rather you'd take them all. I've no Wines, place for them.' So, thanking him, up I went. There was quite a pile of clothes in the closet -lying, as he had said, on the floor-a couple of fine vests, a dress coat, that he'd torn 'somehow, and some collars out of fashion, I suppose. Then came a rough suit, the sort of suit gentlemen go a gunning in-nice and new it looked-and a soft hat none the worse for wear, and a big plaid silk handkerchief, "Jack will be able to use these," I said to myself, and I folded the things one by one-seeing, as I do so, that there was a gun in the back of the closet, and hoping it wouldn't go off, for I am greatly afraid of fire-arms. The pants were in the basket, the vest and the hat. And I gave a shake to the coat to fold it neatly, and something sharp hit me sharply on the hand. There was quite a scratch when I looked, and I turned the coat about to see what is was. I soon saw at the back of the neck there was a loop to hang it up by, day he was murdered. Then common sense came to me. I left it where it was, and I left the other clothes where they were. It scared meto look at them, and I went straight to the squire's oldest friend, a lawyer As low as 40 Cents, and all will be sold cheap to named Mr. Markham. He thought as I did, that the brooch caught there when the murderer had place under the bushes where he was found; though, of course, no one could say just how it happened, only there was the hand of Providence in it; and, mostly, if you notice, murderers do something to bring themselves to justice.

The suit and handkerchief were the very ones the detectives were after, and they arrested Mr. Ross. He confessed the truth at once.

suppose he thought there was no use trying to hide it; but he hung himself in prison before the trial came on. It was a terrible blow to my poor young lady, and she almost died of it, poor thing; but she has outlived the sorrow and come to be thankful that she was not the wife of the man who murdered her husband.

She never married again, and she lives a quiet life with all her wealth, aud I am her housekeeper still. There were some in the town wicked enough to say that she knew of the murder, but she was as innocent of it as any other crime. Her heart was broken, I think, but it was pure as a child's, and I'm sure when she dies—and that won't be long coming, I'm afraid-that she will have no fear of meeting her Maker. The only fault she ever committed was marrying the old squire without being in love with him.

"Advance" Scientific Miscellany

Yankee ingenuity seems to be at last outdone. A very useful system has, it s said, been inaugurated in Belgium, by which subscribers to the telephone exchanges can be awakened at any desired hour in the morning by means of a powerful alarum.

Dr. Jennings, of Paris, declares music to be a very valuable agent in mental diseases. He has long used it in the treatment of his patients, and finds that it exerts a most soothing effect upon their minds.

At a recent soiree in Paris, M. Frouve showed a live fish with its body lighted from within by his polyscope, a minute form of which, with conducting wires passing to the hands of the operator, the fish had been caused to swallow. The whole body became transparent in the dark, so that the vertebræ could be counted, and all details examined. is expected that a great variety of uses will be found for this little instrument.

While our knowledge of the regions surrounding the North Pole has been greatly extended by the energy and enterprise of modern explorers, comparatively little has been done in the exploration of corresponding portions of the southern hemisphere. At the head Wilkes believed that he had established the existence of an Antarctic continent: and this discovery was verified a year later by Sir James Ross, who found the extensive Victoria Land, with mountains 14,000 feet high and an active volcano. The expedition now being fitted out for Antarctic exploration under the auspices of the Italian Geographical Society, will, it is stated, be turnished with everything necessary for a prolonged voyage, it being the intention of the party, under the command of Lieut. Beve, to winter in the polar

"I have endeavored to state the higher and more abstract arguments by which the study of physical science may be shown to be indispensable to the complete training of the human mind, but I do not wish it to be supposed that because I may be devoted to more or less abstract and unpractical pursuits, I am insensible to the weight which ought to be attached to that which has been said to be the English conception of Paradise-namely, 'getting on.' Now the value of a know. ledge of physical science as a means of getting on is indubitable. THE A. B. LIME AND CEMENT CO'Y Best Quality Selected Lime BERT and INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAYS. This Lime differs from all other Brands in the market—having peculiar cement qualities, which hardens it like stone, and makes it imprevious to the action of water. It requires no cement to m-prove it, and is the CHEAPEST in the market for all purposes.

For Agricultural purposes it can be furnished by the car load in bulk, CHEAP, and is the best as well as the cheapest fertilizer known. All orders should be addressed THOMAS MCHENRY, Manager A. B. Lime &Cement Company, Hillsboro, Albert County
