doing their duty towards the maritime provinces--not sufficiently keeping the superior advantages of the provinces to the front. He had been advised to go to the Western States by persons who told him he could not do anything in his business in the provinces. He says: "But he that as it may, I have found some neighborhoods within a radius of 50 miles at a stretch, such stretches of country as Cumberland, Westmorland, Albert County, the St. John Valley, and your own Annapolis Valley--in which there is sufficient room to graze and grow hay for from 50,000 to 100,000 head of stock--not to speak of parts of your Province which I have not been invited to visit, but which, from what I have seen and heard, I should say are capable of raising as many more. Having visited those places where cattle can be grazed during the summer season and hay prepared for winter feeding, I am quite persuaded that there are other parts of the Province equally eligible for growing roots, potatoes and oats, for winter feeding. Therefore, I can see quite easy to procure in the Maritime Provinces all I shall require for my business for many years to come; and that's what has induced me to stop in Nova Scotia."

Remarkable Visitation. A remarkable lightning visitation occurred at Louisville, Ky., a few days ago. Four boys were playing ball. Their ages averaged from twelve to fourteen years. They were pupils of a school and it was recess time. Their game was just concluded, and the ball summoning them to school duties was ringing, thereby causing them to be in the same part of the grounds where their coats and hats had been placed before they began the game.

A flash struck the earth and the boys were for a moment obscured from sight, so vivid was the lightning. When the few people in the neighborhood again looked towards the boys, they were all flat on the ground. Two gentlemen ran to the spot, and to their horror discovered four boys' faces upturned in death. Two other boys' faces, lay near their companions. The gentlemen quickly procured water and quenched the fire in the clothing of the boys, as well as stamping out the flames which were fast burning parts of their apparel that had been torn from their bodies. Vain efforts had been previously made to revive all of the boys, who appeared lifeless, and four of them were recognized as positively dead. The doctors found the four out of the six had been struck dead. The spot of earth which bears the mark of the bolt could be covered by a bushel measure. The surface of the ground is but little disturbed and resembles a hole which might have been driven in by a crowbar. On the ground, two or three feet from the spot where the bolt entered, could be seen pieces of clothing, parts of shirts, drawers, suspenders, and fragments of boots; all burned and blackened by the electric fire, resembling a mass of chopped-up rags ready for the manufacture of paper. One was worse disfigured than any of the rest. His clothes were literally burned from his body, and pieces of scorched clothing were picked up on the spot where he fell. His body was burned to a crisp and blackened and seared in a horrible manner. A piece of his undershirt picked up by a reporter, looked like a rag which had been burned on a stove and suddenly extinguished by a dash of water.

The Total Abstinence Zealots. (Rev. Washington Gladden in the "Independent.") It is the sober truth that the zealots who throughout the land have assumed the lead of the temperance "cause," are doing their best to nullify and kill the beautiful grace of self-denial. By their fierce judgments of all who do not totally abstain; by their common dictum, everywhere hammered into their auditors, that he who drinks ever so temperately is worse than the drunkard; by their methods to which they are wont to resort, of espionage and tale-bearing; by their endeavors to heap suspicion and opprobrium upon all who do not adopt their theories, they are making it absolutely certain that multitudes of the best people in the land never will become total abstainers. And not only are these zealots hindering multitudes of good men and women from entering upon this life of benevolence, they are also doing what they can to render valueless the efforts of all those who are trying to lead this life. I, the midst of such a din of denunciation, who can be sure that his abstinence will have any meaning? Will not the suspicion be that he abstains because he does not like to incur the condemnation of the temperance reformers? With such intolerance, misrepresentation and slander are naturally allied. If any man refuses to go with them to the extent of their demands, he exposes himself to all sorts of suspicions and rumors. There is too much reason, they ominously whisper, to believe, that he is on his way to a drunkard's grave. Stories that are utterly baseless are trumped up and brain-battered to bring into discredit the character of the most exemplary and honorable men and women. The sacred laws of hospitality are violated, in the desire to find evidence against those whose "temperance principles" are under suspicion. Now, it is about time for somebody to say, with words whose meaning cannot be evaded, that there are worse evils in this land than drunkenness or druggery, or even "moderate drinking," and that the evil against which the ninth commandment is directed, is one of them. The people who seek to promote total abstinence by heaping false witness against their neighbors, as I am prepared to prove, a numerous race. They deserve a high place among those who do evil that good may come, and of whom Paul has said that their damnation is just. Not only is it just; it is also sure.

Planting Seeds. Thousands of seeds are buried alive--are suffocated through excess of covering. Undue hardness of soil may also prove an obstacle to growth, but the seed and soil covering may also be too soft. A certain amount of resistance seems needful for the development of healthy growth in seeds. The advice not to cover with soil at all, only lay a sheet of glass over pans or pots of small seeds, is also good; but a caution is needful in reference to it. Seeds so covered and placed on shelves within fall reach of the sun, have to endure a heat not beyond their limit. The glass should either be whitened over or covered with paper; but seeds are much better placed in the shade, or even in the dark, until they germinate; they need no light to excite them into growth. As soon as the germ develops into a stem and leaf, not before--can it make any good use of light. If course, seeds germinated in the dark, need careful attention in their first stages of plauting; but with careful introduction to the light your plants speedily gain strength, while a larger percentage of seeds will germinate in shade or semi-obscurity than when exposed to light from the first.
