It is now fifteen years since we commenced business exclusively in the above line, and we can now point with pleasure, to hosts of patrons, who have invariably, purchased from us, during that length of time. Inscribed "A token of regard for muscle crowned with brain." Dufferin for Cairo

By cable to the N. Y. Herald. LONDON, Oct. 31, 1882. The decision of the British government to send Lord Dufferin to Egypt has caused a great sensation in Constantinople. The Ministers were in conference with the Sultan throughout the night. Sir Edward Malet, British Consul General at Cairo, has communicated to the Khedive a telegram from Lord Granville, the British Foreign Secretary, stating that, as the settlement of affairs in Egypt involves the most complicated questions, it would be unfair to Sir Edward Malet to leave to him the entire responsibility, and that, therefore, Lord Dufferin would be sent to Egypt. Lord Dufferin will start from Constantinople for Egypt on Thursday. It is said in Constantinople that his departure is owing to Sir Edward Malet's ill health. Lord Dufferin himself is slightly indisposed. During his absence Sir John Walsham, First Secretary of Legation, will act as Charge d'Affaires at Constantinople. Lord Dufferin will have an audi-correspondent sends the following :-- His Majesty, the Sultan, is still suffering under the severe attack of anglophobia, the first symptoms of which made their appearance with the advent to power of Mr. Gladstone. The disease rapidly developed itself under the Dulcigno treatment, but though much aggravated by the healing remedies subsequently applied to the frontier difficulties between Greece and Turkey, it afterward slumbered for a time, and there were few or no signs of its existence until the surgical operations with which England thought it necessary to meet the Egyptian crisis gave the distressing malady a fresh start. Poor Sultan! Abdul Hamid, I am afraid, has a great deal of the woman in his character. He finds it hard to accept the logic of facts, and would even now try to persuade this which led him to interfere with the poor "hammals" (laborers) returning from Egypt, and to set his face so strongly against Baker Pacha entering the service of the Khedive. His Majesty has refused to accept the resignation of his English General, and in all the official documents referring to him, instead of the highsounding, honorable appellation which, in accordance with Turkish etiquette, should precede the name of Baker Pacha, there is now written but the single word, "Firar" (deserter.) More contemptuous treatment of the wishes of the English government could not possibly have been shown. Lord Dufferin may say what he likes as to not having had anything to do with this appointment of Baker, but I know for certain that he was pressing for the Sul tan's sanction to the arrangement through the military attache and chief dragoman, and that the General's abrupt departure was not so entirely without his knowledge as he would now have the world to sup-restraining influences about him. It is

Oh, a very cunning man is the British Ambassador. With his lisping speech and taste for dancing, his fondness for pretty girls' society and yachting, the paying patrons or not, and we have often Turks, when he first arrived at Constantithought that the old-time system-under nople, thought little of his diplomatic which the editor had leisure to hunt up powers, but they are beginning to dread his debtors and make them pay up under him now at the Porte almost as much as "summary conviction" process would their predecessors did the great Lord Strat ford in the reign of Abdul Medjid. He speedily brought them to book about the hammal business with a very curt message to the palace that unless the arrested men were immediately released he would strike his flag and order tho British iron-clad fleet to the Dardanelles. In justice to the Turkish Ministers it should be known that the imperial "Iradeh" upon which the authorities acted in the matter had been sent to the Dardauelles direct from the palace without their knowledge and sanction. Not but what the Sultan would have found some support for his proceed. ings among the members of the Porte had he chosen to consult them, for there never was such a case of a house divided against itself as the Turkish Cabinet. While the Grand Vizier, assisted by the Minister of Foreign Affairs, has been trying hard to bring about an understanding with England, Mahmood, Nedim, with Assym Pacha, and Djevdet, the foxy Minister of Justice, have been doing their best to widen the breach. Mahmood Nedim has always been very Russian in his tenden. cies, and now that M. de Nelidoff is here, with a special mission to thwart and oppose Lord Dufferin, his inclination to support the Muscovite policy has passed into a more active stage. He is, however, no longer the man, either in body or mind, that he was when he succeeded to the Grand Vizierate on the death of the celebrated Ali Pacha, and in the "Kuchuk" (little Said Pacha) he meets with more than his master. The latter has just gained a great victory in the deposition of the Grand Shereef of Mecca and the appointment Aoou Rekyf Pacha as his successor. Unimportant as the event may have appeared it has a much wider significance than the mere desire of the Sultan to quash local intrigues. It is a complete recognition of the great check the Sultan's Pan-Islamite dreams have received in the settlement of Egyptian affairs brought about by Great Britain.

Egyptian Names.

Mr. Stanley Lane Poole, than whom it would be difficult to find a more competent authority, has addressed to a London newspaper some much-needed instructions as to the pronounciation of the Egyptian proper names of which patriotic poets in England are making such a sad hash. "It may be laid down as a general rule," he says, "that Egyptian names of places and people are much better kept in the middle of the line, out of the way of the rbyme. The neglect of this rule results in such mistakes as Tell-ell-Kebir rhyming with 'sabre,' when it is really pronounced 'Tellel-Kebeer' and would rhyme with 'severe. 'Arabi,' again, does not agree, either in accent or in the sound of the last syllable, with 'lullaby," but rather with 'a harpy;' and Kassassin is no rhyme for 'assassin, though it might run with 'as a scene. Ismailia, with the accent on the penultimate Port Said and Zagazig- both accented on the last syllable-are generally mispronounced in the verses which the war has inspired." Mr. Lane-Poole does not fail to notice that Tennyson did not trouble himself about accents when he made the Caliph Haroun Er-Rashid into "Haroun-al-Rashid," and he concludes his letter with a practical remark, the pregnancy of which American newspaper readers will be quite as prompt as their British brethren to recognize as follows: "Our various and complicated modes of spelling Oriental names are certainly to blame for much of the confusion, and when the same place is spelt in six different ways by six different maps or six different correspondents, to say nothing of the idiosyncracies of individual Oriental names are certainly to blame for much of the confusion, and when the same place is spelt in six different ways by six different maps or six different correspondents, ence with the Sultan on Thursday. It is to say nothing of the idiosyncracies of inexpected that he will return to Constan- dividual Orientalists, it is not surprising that the general public go wrong. If the The Herald says, -Our Constantinople official censor of telegrams had taken the orthography of the seat of war in hand. he might have enjoyed the privileges of exercising a permanent influence on English literature. But probably this road to > immortality did not occur to him. Mr. R. Winlow, Toronto, writes "Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery is a valuable medicine to all who are troubled with Indigestion. I tried a bottle of it after suffering for some ten years, and the results are certainly beyond my expectations. It assists digestion wonderfully. I digest my food with no apparent effort, and am now entirely free from that sensation, which every dyspeptic well knows, of unpleasant fulness after each meal."

Jas. Shannon, Leaskdale, writes: For himself that matters are otherwise, be. many years my wife was troubled with cause he wishes them to be so. He is chilblains, and could get no relief until just about as mad at the present time as a about two years ago; she was then not member of the fair sex who, having set able to walk, and the pain was then so exher mind upon the acquisition of a new cruciating that she could not sleep at bonnet, suddenly finds herself forestalled night. Your agent was then on his reguin its purchase by another. He feels lar trip, and she asked him if he could mighty spiteful, just as she would under cure her. He told her Dr. Thomas' the above mentioned circumstances, and | Eelectric Oil was a sure cure. She tried in his bitter disappointment and anger at it, and judge of her astonishment when the failure of his ambitious schemes would in a few days, the pain was all allayed blindly sacrifice the true interests of his and the foot restored to its natural congovernment to the petty satisfaction of dition. It is also the best remedy for snubbing England, were it not for the burns and bruises I ever used.
