[From the Moncton "Times" Dec. 15th.] THE TIMES, being a Government paper, could expect to receive some pretty hard knocks from the Chatham Advance, a strong Opposition paper. But we were hardly prepared to see the Transcript "handled without gloves" by the Northern organ of the Grits. A glance at an extract from the Advance in another column, anent the Beaver Brook accident, will give a fair idea of what is thought by newspapers at a distance of the course pursued by the Transcript. If it would be a little more candid it would admit this paper has sought to be fair in all its references to the accident. When the reports were circulated as to the con dition of the men in the special engine, we asked the public to suspend judgment awaiting investigation. For doing so we were accused by the Transcript of trying to shield the railway authorities and lay the responsibility on the unfortunates who were killed! We recognized, and believed the public would recognize, the very little about it. When the Advance honestly (and to its credit, we may say, without the political prejudice that characterized some other papers in the treatment of this matter) undertook to make certain facts known, THE TIMES gave these facts to its readers. The railway authorities instituted a special investi-gation as to the truth of the Advance's statements. It is generally believed they were proved to have been correct in the main. The official announcement of the result of that investigation has not yet been made, but doubtless it will be given

[From the Moneton "Transcript" Dec. 15th.] The good-looking editor of the Chatham Advance has had his fine head publicly examined by a phrenologist. The Chatham World gives the "chief traits" of a number of the heads that were examined at the time and finds among them, "Smith, fearlessness; would make a capital war correspondent." The Advance says that Mr. Caie (the phrenologist in question) "acquitted himself so satisfactorily that at the close he received three hearty cheers, which were well deserved." Now, what would be the use of a "fearless war correspondent" unless there was a war? Obviously none. Therefore, there must be a war brought on. The ringing cheers of the people of the North proclaiming "their own war correspondent" seemed to demand that there should be war,—bloody war; war to the knife; "war with a thousand battles, shaking a hundred thrones," so to speak.

But there was a difficulty in the way. amichi flowed smoothly beneath the ice, and yielded up its smelts without demur. The people of Northumberland, of New Brunswick, of Canada and the Continent were in a pacific frame of mind, and pursuing the avocations of peace. Yet the "fearless war correspondent" felt that there must be a war brought on if he had to do it himself. But how? It would be of no use to attack Peter Mitchell, or Michael Adams, for they would of course | Cranberry sauce, and thick squash pies, surrender at discretion. Equally useless to proclaim war upon any of the newspapers that he had before Advanced upon. They would retreat at the first onset, deeming prudence the better part of valor. Casting his eagle eye over the entire country to find some foeman worthy of his steel, the "fearless" man of the Advance saw the still unterrified TRANSCRIPT, and at once charged upon us with that pen of his more mighty than the sword.

Our readers will see that the martial editor of the Advance, in such frame of mind, needed no casus belli. They will not therefore be surprised that the alleged wrongdoing of the TRANSCRIPT is only Or indulge in anything half so goodthis, that when two Moncton men were suddenly killed on the railway we refused to say they were drunk, in the face of sworn testimony at the inquest that they were sober. The Advance states that the charges of drunkenness were afterward known to have been proved before Mr. For he said to himself, "Her means are Pottinger. Well, a member of the TRANscript stail called personally upon Mr. Pottinger to get the evidence upon that then be furnished to the papers. No hint was given us that the testimony would sustain such charges. And now, as against the poor men that can no more make their defence upon earth, does not even the editor of the Advance see that it will be quite time to publish such sad things about them, however true, when we get the sworn testimony?

The editor of the ADVANCE has quite as much respect for dead men as the average christian, but he recognizes the fact that the duties of the journalist's profession sometimes extend, in matters of death by Railway collisions, ahead of and beyond "sworn testimony." The class who are ready to wring their hands and weep whenever anything beyond or short of To the stingy old wretch) "you have given flattery is spoken concerning the dead, may be very useful and perhaps, valuable, in the Transcript office, but those who spend time and money in ascertaining facts and publish them, in the interest of the living-for the purpose of checking official indifference that threatens the lives of those who are obliged to travelbest serve the public. The Transcript will do well if it display less hypocrisy and more of a manly and truthful disposition in dealing with this subject.

Mrs. Langtry.

Mrs. Langtry and her affairs occupy a good deal of space in some of the American press, showing at least the extent to which the public have property in her. Mrs. Labouchere's statements place beyoud doubt the fact that she separated from Mrs. Langtry because she disapproved of Mr. Frederick Gebhardt's attentions. When she discovered that this person intended to send to Boston his horses and carriages for her use, she told Mrs. Langtry "that if Mr. Gebhardt goes to Boston, I shall not go." She kept her word.

Mrs. Labouchere continued :--An account of the scandal in some form reached England, and my husband cabled me to return home at once. I am pained as well as surprised that Mrs. Langtry, a woman of the world whose social experiences should have guarded her from the error of a school girl, should gratify a caprice at the expense of her interest and reputation, and after the years of homage that her beauty has inspired she should now mar the promise of a career by yielding to the adulation of a butterfly. "Mrs. Langtry," continued the wounded mentor, "has become such a factor in the public eye that the most vigilant circumspection should mould her conduct in private life, resolutions are ignored, and she has relapsed into the same dangerous gaieties "Your Christian example!" the widow Shrunken away from the living day, as before."
