Sharp Traders.

Joshua Green followed peddling. His cart could show an array of almost every article invented since the days of Noah. The children hailed his coming with boisterous glee, for he sold whistles for a penny, and china dogs with red ears and yellow legs for two cents. The maidens admired his galvanized bosom pins, and the elderly ladies went into ecstasies over his Shaker brooms and water pails.

Joshua was a tall, lank specimen of what the up-country region can do by way of raising Yankees; and if his countenance did not deceive him, he was quite as shrewd as he was gawky.

One fine morning in early spring, Joshua concluded to take a new route of Buena Vista-I was shot from my horse travel, through the large and populous at Waterloo-at Trafalgar I fought side township of Bungcaster. So behold him. by side with the immortal Nelson, and in seated at his ease, on the top of his smart | the bloody campaign of the Crimea I was blue cart, behind the yellow mare, which promoted to the rank I now occupy. had been the pride of his father before Yes, madam, I have seen the bullets fly him, and looked likely enough to endure like hail, and heard the red hot cannon as long as the 'Deacon's Masterpiece-the Wonderful One Horse Shav.'

When our hero had driven seven or eight miles, he drew up in front of a preat the door. A cunning visaged woman, with nose whittled down to a point, and keen black eyes answered his summons.

'Want to buy any tin-ware, to-day, marm? brooms, pails, strainers, dippers, clothes pins, pans, combs, wash-boards, shaving soap, razors, strops, clocks, jewelry, needles, or tape, or anything?' 'No, I don't know as I do,' answered the woman reflectively; 'what might you take for your pay?' 'Wall, almost anything. Beans, peas, old rags, paper, old iron, babies and pretty gals !'

'Have you got any milk pans?' 'Milk pans! I reckon. The cutest lot that ever come this way.'

'What do you ask apiece?' Two shillings, only. Cheap as dirt Worth more than that to melt the tin they're made of. But these is hard times, ye see, and we have to sell below cost. Tremendous hard times for us poor peddlers, I tell you !'

The woman, whose name was Glegg, accompanied Joshua out to the cart, to inspect his merchandise. The physiogwell, but she couldn't think of paying two shillings apiece for them. The most she would offer was thirty cents. But. no ! Joshua was indignant. He had named the very lowest price that he could possi. pleased; she must beat him down. bly part with them for.

Mrs. Glegg capitulated. She had a quantity of rye that she would like to dispose of-if they could make a trade on that, she'd take three of the pans at two shillings. Joshua was always ready for a trade, and followed Mrs. Glegg to the barn, to inspect the grain, with alacrity. It was in an open box, or trough, and as might have been surmised, it was not in the cleanest position possible. The mice had made it their solace in time of trouble, as appeared from the quantity of bran and dust strewed around; and the rain, which had beaten through the cracks in the boarding, had produced sprouts a half inch long. But it was Joshua's chiefest boast that he never backed out of a trade. On there were two bushels of it, and Joshua Mrs. Glegg three milk pans in exchange.

Evidently, this woman had a natural talent for bargain making, for she seemed in no wise disposed to allow Joshua to escape as matters stood. She took an amazing strong fancy to a patent churn that graced the top of the cart, and was offered at the low rate of three dollars; nothing hindered her from taking it, she said, but lack of wherewithal to pay for

Joshua urged her to put on her thinking cap, and see if there wasn't something around the farm they could spare as well as not. He'd take almost anything rather than not trade. The woman said there was nothing but the colt, and Mr. Glegg would almost kill her, she supposed, if she let that go; it was such a rare good breed. Joshua pricked up his ears in a minute. -He must see the colt, and see it he did-a poor, miserable, forlorn, half starved looking quadruped; so weak that it was obliged to lean against the pasture fence to keep its footing.

Joshua scratched his head dubiously, but Mrs. Gregg reminded him of his assertion that he would take anything for his wares, and this brought him to terms direction of Mr. Glegg's farm. Mr. He would give the churn for the colt, and that was the best he would do. This proposal was accepted right speedily, and forthwith the churn graced Mrs. Glegg's kitchen; and the hapless colt with pinioned legs, adorned the summit of Joshua's

Mrs. Glegg was jubilant. She had tried vainly for the last five years to get rid of that rye, and as for the colt, Mr. Glegg had been threatening to knock him on the head, for a long while. No wonder the little woman congratulated herself; she had really made a good exchange.

And she was not yet done. She must have a couple of tin dippers and pay in rags. Rags were just the thing, Joshua said; and proceeded to buy two sacks of Mrs. Glegg-undoubtedly surprised, meanwhile, that two such small affairs should weigh so much-but wisely keeping his surprise to himself.

Joshua mounted his perch, and jogged on for a couple of miles, when he encountered Col. Jack Strong, an old friend and particular crony of his. The Colonel resided on a farm near by, and, of course, nothing must be done but Joshua must ride on and spend the night with him.

Our hero accepted the invitation, and as a natural consequence, his friend expressed considerable curiosity about the colt-which led Joshua to tell the whole story. The bags of rags were examined of rags and four pounds of old buttons, shot, bullets and pieces of butcher knives. 'Wall!' quoth Joshua, 'that's what I call tall swindling! But I'l! be even with The colonel commended his resolution, and expressed his readiness to assist him. Mrs. Glegg's forte was a passion for curiosities of all kinds, he said; and being credulous by nature, he thought it would be no difficult matter to make a 'spec' out of her. The two friends put their heads together, and as a result of their united cogitations, behold Joshua next morning -in gray wig, green spectacles, right arm in a sling, and stalwart form incased in the colonel's military coat-plodding on in the direction of Mrs. Glegg's. When he

"Won't you walk in and rest?" "Thank you. I guess I will. I have been wounded, and am not yet strong.' She showed him into a pleasant room, and made him sit down in an easy chair. "You have been in action I reckon?" She was eying the sling.

"Indeed I have, madam! I was in the battle of Brandywine, and Ticonderago. I was wounded at the charge of roar like heaven's own thunder!"

"Good Lord." "Yes, and after all that I have done for her, by land and by sea, my ungratetentious looking white house, and rapped | ful country refuses to give me a pension and here I am, old and worn out and feeble, travelling all the way from the East Indies on foot, without a cent of money, and only getting my bread by selling the precious relics that I have gathered from a hundred battle-fields!" "Relics!" said Mrs. Glegg with a new glimmer in her black orbs-"please be so fulty enveloped in blue tissue paper. "There, marm," said Joshua, lifting one of the bullets reverently-"there is the leaden messenger that took the life of General Marion! And this-' taking up another, with a flattened side-' was extracted from the heart of Pope Gregory after death!'

'My goodness ! Say, now, what would you sell them two for ?'

'Oh, madam! it would grieve me to the heart to part with 'em! But I am needy-desperately needy, and to a beaunomy of the milk pans pleased her very | tiful women like yourself, I will dispose of them for five dollars each.

The woman's face brightened: it was less than she had expected he would demand but it would not do to appear

'Can't you take four and a half ? Money is awful skeerce, and times is hard. 'Madam, you insult me!' he was restoring the pretty bullets to their receptacle. 'Stop, stop! I guess we can make a trade-what about the buttons?"

'These were on the wedding coat of Lafayette; those were worn by Robinson Crusoe, on the Cannibal Island, And those graced the coronation robe of Elizabeth Queen of England! And that little half-melted, acorn-shaped button was on the vest of Abednego when he was cast into the fiery furnace.

Mrs. Glegg lifted her hands in amazement, and immediately concluded a trade for five buttons and two bullets, at five dollars apiece. Joshua pocketed the money with a smile of satisfaction, and measuring the grain it was found that declared he must be going. Mrs. Glegg | TABLE LINEN insisted on his spending the night at Glegg allowed fifty cents a bushel-and gave house, but Joshua had a constitutional horror of sharp noses, and declined with

As long as he was in sight of Mrs. Glegg's kitchen windows our pseudo general maintained his limp; but the moment he was out of sight of those port holes he sprang over the stone walls into the fields, threw away his cane, and took a 2:40 pace for Colonel Strong's. The colonel was delighted with the success of Joshua's expedition, and laughed so heartily over the 'sell' that he burst his suspenders-and Pattie his pretty brown-haired niece-sewed them together again. The next operation was to be performed on the colt. A week on the colonel's good feed brightened up the spirits of that sorry animal astonishingly and rounded his lank body out to tolerably fair proportions. Joshua clipped his tail, painted him jet black, curled his mane on a hot fire-shovel handle; and rubbed him down with a tallow candle till he shone like ebony. Then dressing himself in his best suit of clothes-which he always carried in his cart-he set out with his colt in the Glegg, he had been informed, was famous for having thoroubbred cattle and horses. Glegg was at work near the road, and espied Joshua before he got half down the hill. A rigid cross-examination of the beast ensued-Joshua swearing it was the foal of Flora Temple, and Mr. Glegg trying to buy it at a low rate. Joshua finally said he would not sell it at all, and upon this Mr. Glegg's offers went up like the mercury in dog days. And the result of it was that our friend reluctantly suffered himself to be persuaded, and disposed of the colt for one hundred and twenty-five dollars. The next morning, Joshua Green kissed Pattie Strong, mounted his cart and drove off. As he was passing Glegg's, he saw Mrs. Glegg at the pump washing her churn-he turned up that way, and asked her how she liked her purchase. And she asked him how he liked his colt.

'I didn't keep him long enough to find out,' said Joshua; 'I sold him yesterday.' 'Sold him? did you? who to, may I

'There he stands, now, remarked our hero, pointing to the identical beast which was luxuriating in a clover field near by.

Mrs. Glegg stood still a moment, before she comprehended the whole extent of the affair. But when she did recover herself, she was absolutely furious. She seized a stone and took aim at the pedler's head, but the projectile went through the winand the result brought to light two pounds dow of the woodshed and knocked a

Over Four Millions in Use

The GENUINE SINGER SEWING MACHINE has been awarded the first premium over all Wor'd's Fairs, at State Fairs and at County Fairs, in every part of the United States. Three quarters of all the Sewing Machines sold throughout the world in 1880 were "Singers," and there must be a reason for that. When any of our all the other kinds to such an extent as that there must be some way of accounting for it all. Other Sewing Machine Manufacturers refuse to state their sales! Why? Companies have sprung up in every part of the Union and Dominion of Canada for naking an imitation "Singer Machine." Why are not similar companies formed for making imitation of other Sewing Machines? The public will draw its own inference. Gold is continually counterfeited; brass and tin never!
