The Letter from Over the Sea-

Whether it be this gladsome day, Where perfect beauty lies
In a golden sheen on the ocean's breast
'Neath the laughing summer skies, Whose sunbeams glisten and gleam and glance
'Mid the sleepy forest trees,
While the meadow grasses are hard at play
With the fragrant, frolicsome breeze.

Or whether it be the happy news This day has given to me, This treasure my hand and heart hold fast, his letter from over the sea-O, I have asked my heart a score of times Why it has grown so gay, Whether because of one precious gift, Or because of the gladsome day;

And my heart has questioned of me as well Wherefore my lips should sing, And why to my eyes persistently
The happy tears should cling;
And here by the casement as I stand
In the breath of the flowers fair
And the subtle fragrance of clover bloom

With the sunbeams kissing my brew and hair, And turning to shining gold The words which come from over the sea, The letter my hand doth hold. We answer each other, my heart and I: "Though the day be fair and bright, Yet neither to breeze, nor flower, nor sun, Do we owe our sweet delight;

But only to this, the precious gift Which claims both heart and hand, And wooes as only love can woo, Love only understand" And thus it is that the gladsome day, With its joyous azure skies, Its golden shadows, and merry breeze, Seems perfect to my eyes.

We had not dreamed, my heart and I, That there could such gladness be As has come to us on this summer day In our letter from over the sea. So shine, ye sunbeams, glistem and gleam, And turn my letter to gold;
For hiding safe in its dear white folds
A dear old story is told. -Mary D. Brine, in Harper's Weekly

My Uncle's Will.

My uncle was a millionaire, and rejoiced in the euphonious name of Smith. My elder brother had been named as his heir, and I was sent to Japan and placed in a mercantile house to work out my own salvation. I worked diligently for five years at this pursuit, at the end of which time I received a letter from my uncle's family lawyer announcing the death of that relative, disinherited on account of a mesalliance he had contracted.

I was somewhat dismayed at the con-Brooke, a young lady I had never seen | said and scarcely heard of, otherwise the whole of the vast estate would be distributed among the charities. Howto shed a tear over my uncle's memory, and started home.

Having plenty of funds and time at my disposal I prosecuted my journey | Uncle John ordered me to marry, and slowly, visiting on my way every place | whom I pictured to myself a fat, dairyof interest on the continent.

My travelling companion was a wealthy young Englishman, named knowing, and who introduced me into the best society. At Manheim we fell in with a widow lady and her neice, whom Lockhart had met in England, and claiming them for our country women, we soon became fast friends, travelled with them to Heidelberg and took rooms at the same hotel.

little dreaming that I was too far gone to retreat. But the last day of Heidelberg settled it. We were out for our usual stroll among the ruins, and were sitting on a hoary, moss-grown block of decaying granite. I was about to announce my near departure for home, and was trying to come to the point, when I suddenly looked up into my companion's face. The soft sweet glance I received from her cerulean eyes sealed my fate. Resign her for the sake of riches! Permit myself | building in the city remained whole, all, and I would toil for her sweet sake. I hurriedly reasoned thus, and then told Passionately I poured forth my appeal. She seemed to grow close to me at each word, and ere I ended my arm was circling her taper waist, her blushing cheek was pillowed on my breast, her wavy hair hung over my shoulder like rivulets of molten gold, and with one long, lingering, tooth-pulling kiss our betrothal was completed.

The next day I left for England and at once waited upon my uncle's lawyer, Mr. Capel, and after receiving his congratulations coolly informed him that I did not mean to accept the entail upon | hind him sat a small man reading a magathe conditions named in my uncle's zine "You are surely not already mar-

At all events you will hold how useless it is to argue with a man in love; but I would advise you to go down and see the old place, and then book this way, and reach over like this perhaps you will change your mind," and take him by the nose as I take you, added the sly advocate, as he bowed me and give it a three-quarter twist-just out of the office. I went down to Matonville. The splendid mansion and spacious demesne seemed still more magnificent than ever after my long absence; but my faith never wavered, and I held true to my allegiance to Cissie. She knew nothing of my belongings or affairs, save that I | ly !" had inherited a large estate, and was well to do in the world; this much she had learned from Lockhart. When I saw Mrs. Grantham's arrival announced in the fashionable paper, I at once proceeded to London, and repaired to her house in Portman square. She gave me a cordial welcome; and Cissie-dear girl-flung her arms around my neck and tenderly embraced me, as soon as I went to Mr. Capel's office. "You may consider me no longer your client. I'm going to plunge headlong into matrimony," I said on enter-

"Without seeing Miss Brooke? I hear she has arrived, and was on the point of visiting her. Wait awhile, and don't do anything rash. Who knows but she may have a beau, and refuse to marry you?" he replied. I laughed, but he evidently did not like the ringing, careless tone of my merriment; it sounded like a funeral knell to his cherished hope of still retaining the position of legal adviser to a millionaire.

I went to my hotel, dressed, and then returned to Mrs. Grantham's. I was sitting in the gloaming of evening on a low sofa, with my arm around my darling, reiterating the vows I had taken amid Heidelberg's ruins. The slant crimson rays of the setting sun were streaming across the room, glinting on the golden tresses of my love till they shone like a nimbus of glory, and I was gazing, spell-bound by her beauty, when the door opened, and

Mr. Capel appeared on the threshold. "Pardon my intrusion, Miss Brooke the servant told me you were alone, he said, and then stopped, mute with astonishment, on seeing me.

"This isn't Miss Brooke, but my intended, Miss Grantham. Permit me to introduce you Cissie. This is my lawyer, Mr. Capel," I said.

They bowed to each other-Mr. Capel with a most mystified expression of countenance.

"Am I dreaming, Miss Brooke?" h

"I ought to have told you before, Manchester, and notifying me that I was named as | Harold. I meant to have told you his sole heir, my brother having been just now. Mrs. Grantham is not my aunt-only a friend I was travelling with. She wished me to pass as her niece on our journeys but my real name dition of my inheritance, which was is Brooke. Can you forgive my not that I must marry my cousin Cecelia having told this even to you?" she

The whole truth flashed upon me at once. Could I forgive her, indeed Why, I covered her rosy cheeks with ever, as I was heart whole, I resolved kisses then, bringing tears to the eyes to make the best of it; and proceeded of the lawyer by the warmth with which I grasped his hand.

"Why, Cissie, darling, you are my own cousin-the identical one that maid sort of girl!" I cried in glee.

"Shall I still have you for a client?" said Mr. Capel, with a roguish twinkle Lockhart, who knew everybody worth in his eye. "I think you may trust his affection Miss Brooke, for he intended to resign all claim to one of the finest estates in England to enable him to marry you," he added. "I don't know whether to put that

TERRIFIC STORM. - A most destructive wind and rain storm visited Kansas city between one and two o'clock last Sunday morning. The wind blew sixty miles per hour. The rain fall was heavy and the lightning terrific. The city presented a frightful spectacle. Not a single square in town escaped the storm. The streets in every quarter were strewn with signs and awnings, limbs of trees, roofs and debris of all kinds. Scarcely an exposed to wed a girl I know nothing of! chimneys being blown down, roofs taken Never! Away with filthy lucre! off and in many cases houses being ruined. All the hotels were more or less damaged and business houses and dwellings in every part of the city suffered. The total loss will amount to $200,000. Information from the surrounding country shows the storm was pretty general, and that great damage was done to the crops and nearly all kinds of property.

To the Electors of the County of Northumberland:

GENTLEMEN:—On the 23nd of June next you will be called upon to elect four members to represent you in the Local Assembly. Having had the honor of being your Representative for eight years,

I will again be a Candidate for your suffrages. You can judge by my public acts in and out of the Assembly, if I am worthy of your confidence for another term. If again returned I will use my lative Conncil and do away with the expenses of Government House. I will advocate more economy and

Province. I will look after and secure for our bye-roads and bridges their full share of the public monies appropriated for that purpose and will assist with my best efforts the construction of the Miramichi Valley Railroad and a bridge at Nelson. All measures introduced for the good of the Province generally shall (after due consideration) have my support, inbefore the Election and will then more fully explain my views on public matters. Hoping I may still merit your
