The Fight at Alexandria.

We gave, last week, the press tele circumstances and events which preceded the bombardment of Alexandria and the casualties on the British side. Our special telegram reached us only in part and was not in time for the issue of last week, so we now give the best and most graphic account that has yet come to hand of the contest. It is the New York Herald's cable despatch sent by its special correspondent who was on board H. M. S. Invincible during the action. It was written on Tuesday evening, immediately after the bombardment and before the impressions and effect of the day's work had worn faces. At seven o'clock a signal was made off the writer's mind, and is as follows: The great artillery combat which has firing one gun. A heavy boom came raged all day has ended in complete suc- across the water. Then there was an cess. The object for which we have fought has been attained, the forts and batteries on the sea face of Alexandria being a heap of ruins. Considering the extent and nature of the works, the weight | ing the guns. They would fight! and number of the guns mounted and the dogged pluck with which the Egyptians fought them, the result has been obtained with surprisingly small loss of life, total of casualties in the fleet being five killed and twenty-seven wounded. It difficult, so soon after the engagement, to write a cool and collected narrative of the events of the day. The dead calm which has succeeded the tremendous roar of artillery which has gone on for so many hours seems strange and unnatural. We can scarcely realize that the first great sea fight with artillery of the modern type has been fought and won. FEELING THEIR WAY. At nine o'clock last night the Invincible and Monarch quietly steamed out toward the Meks fort. All lights were extinguish ed and there was perfect quiet fore and aft. Very cautiously we felt our way through the difficult harbour where, even broad daylight, great care is required for the passage of a ship drawing so much water as the Invincible. It was evident that a sharp lookout was being kept on shore, for we had made but little progress | work. in the harbor when the light was suddenly extinguished, doubtless to add to the difficulty of the egress. The ships were ably handled and we made our way safely past the shallows and reached our new ground at ten o'clock and anchored for the night. At four o'clock this morning steam was up and the crew piped to quarters. The officers, after taking coffee in the gun room, all took up the positions assigned to them. There was a general feeling of relief that the long delay was over, that diplomacy was exhausted and that at last the question was to be decided enemy would evacuate the forts. IN POSITION. At half past-four the ships got under weigh, and the order was given to prepare for action. The Penelope and Invincible, being broadside ships, prepared to anchor, while the Monarch, whose turret guns have an all-round range fire, was to fight under steam. As the light increased we could see in the distance the Alexandra, Superb, and the Sultan, lying near each other, facing forts Ada, Pharos and Ras el-Tin, which it was their task to silence while the Temeraire and Inflexible were steaming slowly toward us to support the attack on Fore Meks and the adjoining batteries. Ashore we could make out the Egyptians grouped round their guns in the batteries, evidently prepared to fight. Montreal, Feb. 1st, 1877. The perfect silence that prevailed was very impressive, nothing breaking it save the occasional tinkle of the engine room bell or the quiet order of "Starboard!" or "Port!" given by the captain. The three vessels were moving side by side, sometimes one forging ahead, sometimes another, looking rather like

At twenty minutes past six the ships of the squadron signalled "All ready," but a still further delay was necessary to allow the Egyptian officers carrying the Admiral's reply to the Ministry to be put ashore. Alexandria and the Khedive's Palace, with the other portions of the squadron beyond showed dimly in the morning's sun some few miles away. At half-past six a quiet order was passed round the deck to load with common shell, and a gleam of satisfaction shone on the men's for the Alexandra to open the ball by anxious pause. A deafening salvo from five nineinch guns went from the side of the Invincible, while overhead ten Nordenfeldt guns in the top swelled the din which burst forth from all the ships. The bank of smoke which at once rose like a wall from our side prevented me from seeing the results of our fire, but from the tops it was seen that the shells had struck rather low, and the sights were raised from 1,350 to 1,500 yards. The Monarch ceaseless rattle of their Gatlings and Nor-we could see nothing of the effect which our fire was producing, nor of what the enemy were doing. But soon after we began, a sharp scream overhead, followed by the upleaping of a column of spray to seaward, as the shots struck the water made it clear that the enemy were replying to our iron salute. Soon orders were passed to cease firing until the smoke cleared away. Wind and sun were both in the enemy's favor, and it was some by force of arms. The men, although time before the veil lifted sufficiently for even a glimpse of the shore, and this was lost in an instant. The guns again opened fire, and nothing could be seen from the deck. Twenty minutes after the first gun our fore-royal braces were shot away, and immediately after a second shot penetrated forward, a splinter wounding a stoker severely. At this time they appeared to have got our range pretty accurately, and round and conical shot whistled thickly between the masts. I went round the ship and found the men fighting the main deck guns, all stripped to the waist. Between each shot they had to sit down and wait until the smoke cleared. They were very anxious to know the result of their fire, and asked eager questions of me as to what could be seen above, but I could tell them little, for the smoke hung like a veil
