

(From a Speech by Col. Ingersol.)

an hour. The half story is simply an even in which, during the summer, you will bake every night, and feel in the morning as though only the wind of yourself was left.

Decorate your rooms, even if you do so with cheap engravings. The cheapest are far better than none. Have books, have papers, and read them. You have more leisure than dwellers in cities. Beautify your grounds with plants and flowers and vines. Have good gardens. Remember that everything tends to the elevation of man. Every little morning glory whose purple bosom is thrilled with the amorous kisses of the sun tends to put a blossom in your heart. Do not judge of the value of everything by the market reports. Every flower about the house certifies to the refinement of somebody. Every vine, climbing and blossoming, tells of love and joy.

Make your houses comfortable: Do not huddle together in a little room around a red hot stove, with every window fastened down. Do not live in this poisoned atmosphere, and then, when one of your children dies, put piece in the papers concerning death. "Whereas it has pleased Divine Providence to remove from our midst—" Have plenty of air and plenty of warmth. Comfort is health. Do not imagine anything is unhealthy simply because it is pleasant. This is an old and foolish idea.

Let your children sleep. Do not drag them from their beds in the darkness of night. Do not compel them to associate all that is tiresome, irksome and dreadful with cultivating the soil. In this way you bring farming into hatred and disrepute. Treat your children with infinite kindness—treat them as equals. There is no happiness in a home not filled with love. Where the husband hates the wife; where the wife hates the husband; where children hate their parents and each other there is a hell on earth.

There is no reason why farmers should not be the kindest and most cultivated of men. There is nothing in plowing the fields to make them uncross, cruel and crabbed. To look upon the sunny slopes covered with daisies does not tend to make men unjust.—Whoever labors for the happiness of those he loves, elevates himself, no matter whether he works in the dark and dreary shop or in the perfumed fields. To work for others is, in reality, the only way in which a man can work for himself. Selfishness is ignorance. Speculators cannot make unless somebody loses. In the realm of speculation every success has at least one victim. The harvest reaped by the farmer benefits all and injures no one. For him to succeed it is not necessary that someone should fail. The same is true of all producers—of all laborers.

I can imagine no condition that carries with it such a promise of joy as that of the farmer in the early winter. He has his cellar filled, he has made every preparation for the days of snow and storm—he looks forward to three months of ease and rest; for three months of fireside comfort; three months with wife and children; three months of long and delightful evenings; three months of home; three months of solid comfort.

When the life of a farmer is such as I have described, the cities and towns will not be filled with want—the streets will not be crowded with wrecked rogues, broken brewers, and bankrupt speculators. The fields will be tilled, and country villages, almost hidden by trees, and vines, and flowers, filled with industrious and happy people, will nestle like gems on every plain.

The idea must be done away with that there is something intellectually degrading in cultivating the soil. Nothing can be more noble than to be useful. Idleness should not be respected.

If farmers will cultivate well, and without waste; if they will so build that their houses will be warm in winter, and cool in summer; if they plant trees and beautify their homes; if they will occupy their leisure in reading, in thinking, and improving their minds, and in devising ways and means to make their business profitable; if they will live nearer together and cultivate sociability; if they will come together often; if they will have reading-rooms, and cultivate music; if they will have bathrooms, ice-houses, and good gardens; if the nights can be taken for sleep and the evenings for enjoyment; if everybody will be in love with the fields. Happiness should be the object of life, and if life on the farm can be made really happy, the children will grow up in love with the meadows, the streams, the woods, and the old home. Around the farm will cling and cluster the memories of delightful years.

The Lime-Kiln Club.

"If I had a chance to lib my mouth with 'em," said the President as a solemn hush fell upon the meeting. "I should 'spect to throw down straw tins dat I should 'spect to come to pass, an' I should 'spect to come older strawn' fings dat I shouldn't reckoon on unless a cyclone got loose an' tore down the fences. I should look fur—"

"De man who eats onions to stop an' gurgly wied every man he meets gwine down town."

"I should 'spect men who owed de mose" an' war' de least able to pay to war' de bes' clothes an' have de mose change de bes' food come along."

"I should 'spect my wife to empty de ashes on de spot mose' convenient to myself without any reference as to whether de spot was on my land or his."

"I should 'spect dat broadcloth an' silk should be worn on de street by people who will up on cold 'taters at home."

"I should 'spect de enemy of men whom I did not tend to, an' be beat by de line out end of sich as I favored."

"I should 'spect to be looked upon as a fanatic by men 'belongin' to a different church from mine, an' to be abused an' abused, 'cause I had votin' de opposite of de political ticket."

"I should 'spect about so much bad weather—about so much sickness—about many pains an' aches, an' hungry days 'tween de 'lows, night, an' knowin' de world as I knowk it now, I should 'spect de boats to be in de water, an' de trains to go out, an' de stores open wenever I was in bed wied de ager ober in de cabbage lot in de bes' of de world."
