CHAPTER XVII.

A CHAT IN THE DESERT.

"Archie," said his sister, on one occasion, in rather a significant tone, "you will have some trouble with papa."

"I dare say. Oh yes, I have no doubt of it. But there would have been a row in any case, so it does not matter much. If I had brought home the daughter of an archbishop he would have growled and grumbled. He gave you a pretty warm time of it, Polly, before he let you marry Graham."

the only kind of goods I've got to sell. No. I don't think any one can bring that against me."

"I, for one, would not think of accusing you of any such thing," said his sister warmly. "I hope you would have more pride. Jim was poor enough when I married him."

"Now if I were marrying for money," said he—and he seemed eager to rebut this charge—"I would have no scruples at all about asking Yolande to go and live at Lynn. Of course it would be very economical arrangement. But would I? I should think not. I wouldn't have her shut up there for anything. But I hope she will like the house as a visitor, and get on well with my father and my aunt. Don't you think she will produce a good impression? What I hope for most of all is that Jack Melville may take a fancy to her. That would settle it in a minute, you know. Whatever Melville approves that is right—at the tavern or anywhere else. It's his check, you know. He believes in himself, and everybody else believes in him. It isn't all at Gress that he is the dominion. He is a scholar and a gentleman—that is my beloved aunt's pet phrase, as if his going to Oxford on the strength of the Ferguson scholarship made him an authority on the right construction of a salmon ladder."

"Well, he jumps upon me considerably," said he, frankly; "and I may as well take it out of him when he is at Gress and I am in Egypt. No matter. If he takes a fancy to Yolande, it will be all right. That is how they do with cigars and wines in London—specially selected and approved by Messrs. So-and-so. It is a guarantee of genuine quality. And so it will be if Yolande Winterbourne, approved by Jack Melville, of the metropolis, and forwarded on to Lynn Towers."

"If that is all, that can be easily managed," said his sister, cheerfully. "When she is with us at Inverness we will take her over to call on Mrs. Bell. I know what Mrs. Bell will call her—I know the very phrase; she will say, 'She is a bonnie doo, that.' The old lady is rather proud of the Scotch she picked up in the South."

"She ought to be proud of the Scotch she picked up in the South," said he. "I don't think she ought to be proud of the Scotch she picked up in the South."
