We stood for a little together, The water kissing our feet : Around us glowed glad bright weather : The morning and you were sweet,

I thought, as you stood there dreaming, 'Twas you that lighted the day: And the water, glancing and gleaming And hurrying ever away. Vocal with brief light laughter.

As past you it fled to the sea. Seemed to linger a little, and after I think it agreed with me. Flushed with the wind and glowing, Silent you stood awhile. Hair in the sunlight blowing.

The water sang, "Love is a treasure." "A treasure," my soul replied; 'And the pain of it, and the pleasure, Sweeter than all beside."

Smiling a dreamy smile.

And I saw the wavelets glitter, Glad but to kiss your feet : And the wind sang, "Life may be bitter. But loving can make it sweet." And laughed and loitered around you

And the merry sun kissed and crowned you Queen of the morning there. Everything fair seemed to love you, Seemed proud at your feet to fall : And the lark, singing high above you. Sang you were the fairest of all.

And scarcely a word was spoken,

But our souls to each other spoke,

Surely finding you fair :

Till the dreamy spell was broken, And we started and smiled and woke And so in the glorious weather. In the morning blithe and gay, Happy in being together,

A Railroad in Palestine.

Happily wandered away.

The first railroad in Palestine is being aid out, and the preliminary survey has een completed as far as the Jordan. It is to run between Acre and Damascus, and named after his present Majesty, the he does so that people living at a distance Sultan Abdul Hamid, and probably one from a physician may know of it. reason why the firman has been granted so easily lies in the fact that it passes through a great extent of property which he has recently acquired to the east of the plain of Esdraelon, The concession is held by ten or twelve gentlemen, some of whom are Moslems and some Christians, but all are Ottoman subjects resident in Syria. Among the most influential are the Messrs. Sursock, bankers, who own the greater part of the plain of Esdraelon, and who have, therefore, a large interest in the success of the line. Starting from Acre, it will follow the curve of the bay for ten miles, in a southmiles from the beach. Crossing the Kishon by a 60 foot bridge, it will turn east at the junction of a short branch line two miles long, at Haifa. Hugging the stomach, renews digestion, and changes foot of the Carmel Range, so as to avoid the current of the blood from a sluggish the Kishon marshes, it will pass through and turbid into a pure, rapid, and ferthe gorge which separates that mountain tilizing stream. from the lower ranges of the Galilee Hills, and debouch into the plain of Esdraelon, This plain it will traverse in its entire length. The station for Nazareth will be distant about twelve miles from that town; there may, however, be a short branch to the foot of the hills. So far there has only been a rise from the sea level in twenty miles of 210 feet, so that the grade is imperceptible. It now crosses the watershed and commences to descend across the plains of Jezreel to the valley of the Jordan. Here the Wady Jalud offers an incline as far as Beisan, the ancient Bethshan, and every mile of the country it has traversed so far is private property, and fairly cultivated. At Beisan it enters upon a region which has, partly owing to malaria and partly to its insecurity, been abandoned to the Arabs, but it is the track of all others which the passage of a railway is likely to transfigure, for the abundance of the water, which is now allowed to stagnate marshes, and which causes its unhealthi ness, is destined to attract attention to its great fertility and natural advantages, which would, with proper drainage, render it the most profitable region in Palestine. Owing to the elevation of the springs, which send their copious streams across the site of Beisan, the rich plain which descends to the Jordan, [500 feet below, can be abundantly irrigated, There is a little bit of engineering required to carry the line down to the valley of the Jordan, here 800 feet below the level of the sea, which is then followed as far north as the Djisr el Medjamieh. Near this ancient Roman bridge of three arches, which is used to this day by the caravans of camels which bring the produce of the Hauran to the coast, the new railway bridge will cross the Jordan, probably the only one in the world which will have for its neighbor an actual bridge in use which was built by the Romans, thus, in this now semi-barbarous country, bringing into close contact an ancient and a modern civilization. After crossing the Jordan the line will follow the banks of that river to its junction with the Yarmuk which it will cross, and then traverse a fertile plain of rich alluvium, about five miles long and four wide, to the banks of the ridge which overlooks the eastern margin of the Sea of Tiberias. This is the extent to which the survey has been

It is not decided whether to rise from the valley by the ridge which overlooks the Yarmuk, or to follow the east shore of the Lake of Tiberias to the Wady Semakh, which offers great advantages for a grade by which to ascend nearly 3,000 feet in about fifteen miles. This is the toughest bit of engineering on the line, and is in close proximity to the steep place down which the swine possessed by devils are said to have rushed into the sea. Once on the plateau, it will traverse the magnificent pasture lands of Jaulan and the grain growing country of Hauran, with probably a short branch to Mezrib, which is the principal grain emporium, and one of the most important halting places on the great pilgrimage road from Damascus to Mecca. It is calculated that the transport of grain alone from this region to the coast will suffice to pay a large dividend upon the capital required

---[Daily Telegraph.] A Remedy for Diphtheria

One of our most esteemed city physicians, who, with modesty becoming his worth, does not wish to have his name appear in print, sends us the following in reference to the treatment of diphtheria: Observing the frequency and fatality of diphtheria, I would suggest the following remedy, that I have not used in nine consecutive cases, with uniform good results. The remedy can be kept in every house, and, in suitable doses, can be given to children of any age without injury. I might say that, in connexion with this medicine, I have always used a cold water pad around the throat from ear to ear. A St. John despatch of 19th says;-A fire broke out at St. George this morning in a store occupied by James O'Neill, tailor, on Portage St. The wind was blowing a gale at the time, and before the conflagration could stayed nine buildings were destroyed. The names of the losers are as follows: K. P. Gillmore, barn, full of hay; Temperance Hall, Primary School Room, Epps. The dwelling of Mr. G. McGee caught fire several times, but the sparks were rapidiy extinguished. The postmaster and Jas. O'Neill were slightly burned, but not dangerously.
