"ALLT-NAM-BA, Wednesday Morning. "DEAR ARCHIE, -A grave duty calls me suddenly away to the south. No doubt you can guess what it is; and you will understand how, in the mean time at least, all our other plans and arrangements must yield to it. Probably, as I am anxious to catch the early boat at Foyers, I may not see you to say good-by; and so I send you this message From your affectionate

"YOLANDE." She regarded this letter with much self-humiliation. It was not frank. Perhaps she had no right to write to him so, without telling him of what had him. there might never be need of any explanation. Her life was to be all differ-

The household began to stir. There was a crackling of wood ir the kitchen; outside, Sandy could be heard opening the doors of the coach-house. Then Jane put in an appearance, to finally close her young mistress's portmanteaus. And then, everything having been got ready, when she went down-stairs to the dining-room, she was surprised to find her father there.

"Why did you get up so early?" said she, in protest.

"Do you think I was going to let you leave without saying good-by?" he | That was the way o' those times, and answered. Just listen to the story : her, her purpose being so obviously settled and clear. There was another hame; thing: he showed the greatest embarrassment in talking in any way whatever about the subject. He could not bring himself to mention his wife's name. To Yolande he had said "your poor mother" -but only once. He seemed unable to make this thing that he had hidden from her for so many, years a topic of conversation.

And it was almost in silence, and with a face overshadowed with gloom, that he saw the last preparations made. He followed her out to the dog-cart. He himself would fasten the rugs round her knees, the morning being somewhat chilly. And when they drove away he stood there for a long time regarding them, until the dog-cart disappeared at the turning of the road, and Yolande Yolande was not driving this morn-

Then they drove on again. When they had climbed the hill she looked over to Lynn Towers, but she could not make out any one at any of the windows. There were one or two stable lads about the out-houses, but otherwise no sign of life. She was rather glad of that. If he had waved his handkerchief to her, could she have answered that signal without further hypocrisy and shame? Little did he know what traitress was passing by. But inded she was gradually ceasing to reproach herself in this way, for the reason that she was ceasing to think about herself at all. It was of another that she was thinking. It was his future that concerned her. What would all his after-life be like? Would there be some reparation? Would time heal that as it healed all things? When she got to Gress she saw that Mrs. Bell was in the garden behind the house, and thither she made her way. Yolande's face was pale, but her manner was quite calm and firm. "Well, here are doings!" said the cheerful old lady. "And I was just hurrying on to get a few bit flowers for ye. 'Deed, ye're early this morning." "It is very kind of you, Mrs. Bell but please do not trouble. You expected me, then? Mr. Melville told you?" "That he did. And I'll just be delighted to be of any kind of service to ye that is possible. I'll be ready to go up to Allt-nam-ba by mid-day; and I'm thinking I'll take one o' the young lassies wi' me, in case there's any necessity for a helping hand. The other one will do very well to look after this place

Readers of the Commercial can not well forget that a large space has for years been taken up by Kendall's advertisements—especially of a certain Spavin Cure. We have had dealings with Dr. Ken-dall for many years, and we know of some large dall for many years, and we know of some large business houses in cities near by who have also dealt with him for many years, and the truth is fully and faithfully proven, not only that he is a good honest man, and that his celebrated Spavin Cure is not only all that it is recommended to be, but that the English Language is not capable of recommending it too highly.

There are hundreds of cases in which that has been proved. are hundreds of cases in which that has been proven to our certain knowledge, but, after all, if any person coufines the usefulness of this celebrated medicine to curing spavins alone, they make a big mistake.
