

YOLANDE.

By WILLIAM BLACK. AUTHOR OF "SHANDON BELLA," "MARCUS OF DARE," "WINTER WOODS," "SHEENA," ETC.

Pretty Mrs. Graham was standing in her room at Inverstry, ready to go out; her husband was in the adjacent dressing room, engaged in the operation of shaving.

"You need not be afraid, Jim," said the young man; "everything has been arranged. Everything will go quite right till I come back. And Archie is to meet me at Fort Augustus, so that the ponies won't have the long pull up Glendoe."

"Why can't he manage his own affairs?" the stout warrior grumbled. "I am not going to trouble about it," said he, with a sudden air of indifference. "I am not going to make a fuss. They can go their way; I can go mine."

"Yes, and the Winterbournes will go theirs," said his sister, sharply. "Very well."

"But it is not very well; it is very ill. Come now, Archie, be reasonable. You know the trouble I had before I was married; it was got over by a little patience and discretion."

"Oh, if you think I am going to cringe and crawl about for their consent, you are quite right. I would not do it for anything. Why, said he, with some sense of injury in his tone, "I like the way they talk—as if they were asked to sacrifice something! If there is any sacrifice in the case, it seems to me that I am making it, not they. I am doing what I think best for Lynn, and has always been starved for want of money. Very well; if they don't like it they can leave it alone. I am not going to beg for any favor in the matter."

"It might be as well not to talk of any sacrifice," said his sister, quietly, "and yet with some significance. I don't think there will be much sacrifice. You can't have ready money, what have you brought—the dog-cart?"

"Yes." "Shortly thereafter they set out for Lynn; and did not resume their conversation; for as they had to take the steep road leading into Glendoe, the Master got down and walked, leaving the reins to his sister. They passed through the deep woods, and up and on to the open heights. They looked down into the little lake that lies in a mountain-cup up there. And then, in due time, they came in sight of the inland country—a broad and variegated plain, with here and there a farm-house or village."

"The name in sight of something else too—the figure of a young woman who was coming along the road. Mrs. Graham's eyes were fixed on that solitary person for some time before she exclaimed, "Archie, do you see who that is?" "Of course I do," said he, not with the best grace. "It is she, isn't it?" she said, eagerly.

setting them crazy. That comes of living out of the world, and of being trodded by gillies and town councillors. But I am not going to trouble about it," said he, with a sudden air of indifference. "I am not going to make a fuss. They can go their way; I can go mine."

"Yes, and the Winterbournes will go theirs," said his sister, sharply. "Very well."

Mrs. Graham's eyes were fixed on that solitary person for some time before she exclaimed, "Archie, do you see who that is?" "Of course I do," said he, not with the best grace. "It is she, isn't it?" she said, eagerly.

"I suppose you can see that for yourself," said the answer. "Perhaps it isn't the first time that you have met her?" said she, looking up with a quick scrutiny. "If you want to know, I have not set eyes on her since last Christmas. She has been living in Inverstry."

"He pulled up. This young lady whom they now stopped to speak to was a good-looking girl of about twenty, with light brown hair and very dark blue eyes. There was some firmness and shrewdness of character in the face, despite the shyness that was also very visible there. For the rest, she was neatly dressed—in something of a town style."

"She merely nodded to the Master, who took of his hat; but she was on Mrs. Graham's side of the dog-cart, and her bright, fresh-colored turned face had something of diffidence or self-consciousness in it."

—that means that human beings are not born with enough money. He made quite a fuss about it, and him that there were prudential reasons for the match, as if there were any use in blinding one's eyes to obvious facts. Well, I don't care. I have done my best. My intentions toward Lynn were sincere and honorable; now they can make a hash of the whole thing if they like."

"It is folly speaking like that," his sister said, sharply. "Surely you have not the spirit to hold to a little opposition of this kind."

"A little opposition!" he said, with a laugh. "It's about as bulky as Borden Hill; and I for one am not going to quarrel with you, head against it. I prefer a quiet life."

"But you are bound in honor to Yolande Winterbourne not to let the engagement cease," she cried. "Why, to think of such a thing! You ask a girl to marry you, she consents; and then you throw her over because this person or that person objects. Well, I never heard of one of the Leesies acting that way before. I was only a girl, but I showed them what stuff I was made of when they tried to interfere with me."

"Oh, but that's different," he said, coolly. "Girls are romantic creatures. They rather like a romance. Whereas men prefer a quiet life."

"Well, I never heard the like of that—" "Wait a minute. I am going to talk to you plainly, Polly," said he. "I wanted to marry Jane Stewart; and I think she would have had me if I had definitely asked her. I have not said I dare say she would."

"Oh, you think she hasn't as much pride as anybody else because she is only a minister's daughter! That is all the more reason why I should like her. She is all that you need, and she is all that I am making a fuss about. You are right, she is a minister's daughter. I don't want to quarrel with you, but you are right, she is a minister's daughter. I don't want to quarrel with you, but you are right, she is a minister's daughter."

"And you really mean to say," said Mrs. Graham, with her pretty dark eyes regarding him with astonishment, "that you are deliberately prepared to jilt Yolande Winterbourne merely on account of this little difficulty?"

"I don't think I will speak to papa again until after dinner," said she, musingly. "Then I will have another try—with Corrievreck."

General Business. KENDALLE'S SPAVIN CURE.

The Most Successful Remedy ever discovered, as it is certain in its effects and does not blister. Read PROOF BELOW.

From the Ontario Press, N. Y. OSWEGO, N. Y., Jan. 6th, 1881. Early last summer Messrs. B. J. Kendall & Co., of New Brunswick, N. J., sent me a copy of the issue of the 'Proctor' for a half column advertisement for one year setting forth the merits of Kendall's Spavin Cure. The enclosed was secured from the firm a quantity of bottles, and I immediately commenced giving it to my subscribers to test its merits.

FROM COL. L. T. FOSTER. YONKERS, N. Y., May 10th, 1880. DEAR B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gentl.—I had a very bad case of Spavin on one of my horses. It was a fine horse, and I had a large bone spavin on one joint and a small one on the other which made him very lame. I had tried many of the best veterinary surgeons who failed to cure him. I was almost despairing when I saw your issue of the 'Proctor' containing an advertisement for Kendall's Spavin Cure. I at once ordered a bottle and used it according to directions. It was not long before the spavin disappeared. I used one bottle and the colic went away. I was so glad and so much pleased with the result that I at once ordered another bottle and used it on another horse. It was the same as the first. I am now well and my horse is well. I am sure that your Spavin Cure is the best in the world. I have no more to say. Yours respectfully, L. T. FOSTER.

Rememorer This. If you are sick Hop Bitters will surely aid Nature in making you well when all else fails. If you are inactive or dyspeptic, or are suffering from any other of the numerous diseases of the stomach, or if you are in your own fault if you remain ill, for Hop Bitters are a sovereign remedy in all such complaints.
