A CHRISTMAS EPISODE

She was only a governess in George Wilbraham's house. A pretty ladylike, quiet, little creature, whom his two motherless children dearly loved, and before long their father was in danger of following their example.

Mrs. Vane saw that. She was a widow; handsome, poor, and with eyes that were unusually keen for all that concerned the wealthy widower. For he was her cousin, and she had kept house for him since his wife's death with the intention of ultimately consoling him for his bereavement.

"That girl is dangerous," she thought. 2,305 pounds. "She must be got rid of at once."

More easily said than done however. The children loved their gentle friend and play-fellow, and their father made no secret of the pleasure her presence and sweet companionship afforded him. While as for Lily-though she was "only a governess"—it was plain that an unwonted sense of happiness made her blue eyes more bright and her smiles more frequent. Was it since Mr. Wilbraham returned? Well, yes -everything was surely pleasanter under the master's sway. He was so good, so kind. And he, surely his life was lonely. She wondered how he would ever-And at that thought she stooped and kissed the white winter rosebud that she held, and which he had given her. That instant a voice fell on her ear and a firm hand grasped her arm. "Do you kiss the flower for its own sake?" asked the voice, "or for the giver's ?" Poor Lily started guiltily. "The-giver, madam?" she faltered.

"I do not understand-" "Mr. Wilbraham gave you that rose. He is my betrothed husband. I will never give him up. His fancy for you | Times, Nov. 29. can only end in your dishonor; for though you may win his heart from me, you cannot win his hand. That is engaged to me and I will claim it.'

Lily, with white face and great, dilated eyes, now, suddenly, with one sharp enemy's feet.

"Oh, madam, what must you think of me," she cried, with a cry of passionate sorrow. "Oh I must leave this place! Oh, let me go at once!"

"I shall place no constraint upon you, my dear," she said. "I see that I can trust your honor."

Mr. Wilbraham had said that he should not be home that night, and the poor girl's one anxiety was to leave without seeing him again. So, when her preparations were done, she went up to the children's class-room to bid the place where she had dreamed such happy dreams a last good-bye. It was but 3 o'clock. Mrs. Vane joined her hurriedly.

"Miss Dean," she said, my cousin is returning. I saw him from my window slowly riding up the lane. You must not meet him. You can slip out of the back way as he enters the front. You can walk to the station-it is not more than a mile," (it was more than two miles, but Mrs. Vane was no trammelled by any painful reference for the truth.) "Here is your money, and to-morrow I will send your trunk. "Will you do this, or-with a look of insulting suspicion-"will you stay and try and steal from me my husband ?"

The young girl's fair face flushed and she threw back her head with a proud

"You insult me madame," she said, with dignity. "I have shown no inclination to do you wrong." Then she slipped away.

Little Annie was playing near the vestibule. She caught her in her arms and kissed her.

"Good bye, little darling!" she cried and set her down again. Next minute the door swung open and the governess Wilbraham said. "I cannot understand it. Helen. Surely she told you why ?"

'Something about a lover, I believe," said Mrs. Vane, indifferently. "You know she is a very pretty girl and

Mr. Wilbraham turned away with a clouded brow and went into the children's 100ms. "I could have sworn that she cared for me," he muttered, "and all the while she was engaged to some other fellow. This night I should have asked her to be my wife. Curse such false coquettes!" and he saw on a lounge a little form"Hullo! what's this? Annie, his own little five year-old

'Oh, papa," she sobbed, on seeing him "she's dorn. Miss Lily's dorn." He took the little one into his arms and soothed her.

"Why did Miss Lily go, Annie?"

"Auntie Helen did scold her, papa, its promises with the public for fifty-four years, there need be no doubt about the above order being fulfilled to the letter Subscription price dave her. I heard her. And she kissed me and tried-and she's dorn, she's

The sound of horse's hoofs under the window startled her. She sprang to ascertain the cause, and fell back as if she had received a blow. George Wilbraham was riding away to the station at full speed.

conquered and despairing. The game was lost indeed. A letter from her cousin apprised her that he had found her cousin in London, and married her. He requested Mrs. Vane to leave his house before he brought his young bride home.

She obeyed, too humbled and defeated to utter a complaint, and Lily came back to be mistress and queen of the home where she had once been "only a a real boon to birds and a long felt want supplied. governess."

Among the most valuable experiments made recently with a view to ascertaining the difference in the consumption of coal between running a train very rapidly and at a very low speed, those upon the Pennsylvania road, near Philadelphia, present the most pertinent and definite data for arriving at a conclusion. According to the published account, the same conditions, same number of cars, and similar engines were employed, and the trains in each case went the same distance-119 miles and back, with some stops. The fast train ran on schedule express time, and consumed 6,725 pounds of coal; the slow train ran at twelve miles an hour, and consumed 4,420 pounds, being a saving of
