The Policeman's Romance

"It is four years ago since I was doing duty down on Regent-street. The wind howled round the corners that night, catching up the snow that had fallen during the day and whirling it in drifts in the doorways.

"There are lots of big shops down there, and the street is always crowded of evenings, but this evening it was a sight to me. There were hundredsyes, thousands-of pretty girls out doing their last shopping before Christ-

"It was getting towards nine o'clock, when my attention was attracted to a pretty little girl who was tripping across the street.

"Just as she reached the kerb she slipped upon a patch of ice and fell

"It took me about half a-second to reach the little woman and pick her up. She was shaken by the fall, though not injured, and I had to support her for a

"Then she recovered herself all of sudden, straightened up primly, and saying, 'Thank you, Mr. Officer,' tripped away, giving me a pretty look that went clear through me.

"I had tramped up and down my beat three or four times, when a bareheaded cash-boy ran out of one of the big shops and yelled at me:

" 'Come quick! the manager has eaught a shop-lifter?'

"I was met at the door by a shopwalker, who piloted me to the bookkeeper's office at the back of the shop. "Two men were in there, and a woman was standing in the corner, with weeping as if her heart would break. " 'Ah! officer, 'said the manager, who was a mere business machine, "I am glad you have come. One of our clerks at the lace counter discovered at a valuable piece of lace had been stolen, and gave the alarm. This woman hurried away from the counter. She was detained and brought here and searched. The lace was found in an outside pocket of her sacque. This the piece on the desk here.'

" 'Have you asked the woman for an explanation?' I asked, hoping that some explanation would fix the matter

"' What can she say?' cried the business machine. 'She was caught red-handed in the act. She is the thief. That settles it.'

' There was a sudden movement on the part of the woman. She snatched her handkerchief from her face, extended her right arm and finger, which shook with rage, and turning her blazing eyes upon the business machine, she fairly screamed:

"Tis false! I am no thier! Then she fell in a heap upon the floor.

"As she turned her pallid face upon the manager I started as if some one had struck me. It was the black-eyed little girl that I had picked up scarcely half-an-hour before. " I lifted the girl up gently and placed her in a chair, and called for water. with which I bathed her temples. "Pretty soon she came out of the swoon. As her eyes met mine they lit up with a glad light, and she cried : "'Oh! I'm so glad. This officer will tell you that I am not a thief, won't you!'

"Here was a pretty predicament. There was nothing for me to do but my duty, so I told her I was sorry for her, and asked her if she would walk ahead of me quietly.

She made a brave effort to calm herself that touched me hard. I couldn't believe the girl a thief, but the evidence was too strong for me to doubt that she had given way to temptation.

"The poor girl walked ahead of me a few paces and gave me no trouble. found myself wishing that she would in a side street, and waited until I came me a thief, do you?' "Well, I couldn't say 'Yes.' and I couldn't conscientiously say 'No,' so I said neither. I only said that I was sorry for her and wished that I could

"Are you really sorry for me?" she said, and her black eyes filled with tears. 'Oh! I am glad to have one friend, for in all this big city I don't think I have another.

"Then she told me her little story. She was an orphan, and had been brought up by an old aunt in York. About six months before this her aunt had died, and she came on to the city. and turned her hand to lacemaking, and had been able to support herself decently since then. She said she had stepped into the stop to make some small purchases, and was arrested when walking away. She protested that she did not know how the lace came to be found in her pocket.

"I told her again that I was sorry, and in a minute more we were at the

"I explained the case to the sergeant, and got his permission for her to sit in a chair in the office instead of occupying a cell all night.

"I was terribly worried about that girl. Somehow I couldn't get the sorrowful look of those black eyes out of my mind, and I could't sleep; and when daylight came time hung on a peg until court time came. I walked around thinking over the case, trying to arrive at some solution favorable to the girl.

"Of course, when we got to court, Minnie-that was her name-was convicted in one-two-three order. She made no statement-just stood dazed like-and the judge held her for trial in the court above.

"As they led the girl away she was the picture of death. I gave her a nod of encouragement, but she returned it with a look that said just as plainly as words could have said, 'My heart is broken.' "I jammed my helmet down over my eyes and planged out into the street. I had a big job on hand.

"I had questioned her closely as to stood near her at the lace counter.

She could remember none save one attracted her attention because of a remarkable mutilation of one of her ears-as if a piece had been cut out in a triangular form.

"I persuaded the superintendent to grant me a leave of absence for a couple of days, and went to work. I overhauled the pictures at the office, and gazed hard and earnestly at the features of every female 'crook' in the 'Rogues' Gallery,' but I could not find the one I was after.

under the picture of a bold, handsome face and was knocked all into a cocked hat by the words: 'Has a triangular piece cut out of the left ear.' 'Maybe this is my woman,' said I. I had long talk with a detective friend of mine, and after a while he was able place the woman, and told me where she most frequented.

"All that day, and nearly all the next, I was on the look-out for that woman, and was despairing, when a handsome, large woman swept past, actually brushing against me with her sealskin cloak.

"I glanced up and fairly started, for one of her ears was mutilated just as the girl and the note in the office had described "The woman swept on, and I followed. She entered the very shop where I had arrested Minnie, and went up to the very counter where the lace was stolen, and began examining the stock. And then selecting a trifle, Lot 2. 1000 yds. paid for it, and turned to go.

"I was in a quandary. But I was determined to make an effort and run the risk of making a serious mistake.

"Stepping up to her, 1 touched her her face covered with her handkerchief, shoulder and whispered, 'Come with me. I want you a moment'-at the same time looking straight into her > man's face. She fairly trembled for an instant, and then she looked back defiantly and went with me. We had moved but a step or two in the direction of the book-keeper's den, where the girl had been searched three days before, when something struck my foot. I stooped and picked up a bundle of lace. The woman had dropped it. was right. I had found my thief.

"Seeing that she was caught the shop-lifter owned up that she had stolen the piece of lace. The business machine was furious. He said the firm was being ruined by thieves.

"But I had not yet found out about the theft of the other day. So I again looked sternly at the woman, and hazarded: 'This is not what I was look-ing for you for: it was the theft of the ing for you for; it was the theft of the other day, when you thrust the piece of lace into a young woman's pocket on the alarm being raised?'

"For a moment the woman looked boldly at me, and then she broke down completely and sobbed. The confession was complete, and the mystery was cleared up.

"I need hardly say that Minnie was triumphantly acquitted.

"My! but wasn't that a grateful little woman! She just ran and placed her arms around my neck and kissed me "I was kind of taken aback; for although I rather enjoy kissing, I don't although I rather enjoy kissing, I don't like too many witnesses; so I got her away as soon as I could, and took her to a restaurant where we could talk quietly for a few minutes. I married her two weeks afterwards, and the business machine gave her a fifty pound outfit, and was glad to get out of an awkward fix at that price."

HOW AN AFFLICTING ANNUAL VISITOR WAS Plain and simple mechanics are not liable to get out of order. Complicated watches, intended not only to keep the time of day, but to make the movements of the moon and stars, are certain to need frequent repairs. appear.

Also: All that other piece or parcel of land, situate, lying and being in Chatham aforesaid, being part of Lot Number Thirty-Seven and abutted and bounded as follows, namely: Beginning on the southerly side of the Queeen's Highway or Water Street, at the upper or westerly boundary line of that part of said Lot Number Thirty-Seven conveyed to Archibald Matthews, thence southerly along the said line one hundred feet, thence Westerly on a line at right angles with the said circulars received to-day. Please send me some with imprint, printed on one side only. The Kendall's Spavin Cure is in excellent demand with us, and not only for animals, but for human ailments also. Mr. Jos. Voris, one of the leading farmers in our county, sprained an ankle badly, and knowing the value of the remedy for horses, tried it on himalong the said line one hundred feet, thence Westerly on a line at right angles with the said boundary line thirty-six feet, thence Northerly on a line parallel with the said boundary line one hundred feet, or to the said Highway; thence Easterly along the said Highway to the place of beginning, and now in the occupation of Mrs. Mcself, and it did far better than he had expected. Cured the sprain in very short order.
Yours respectfully, C. O. THIEBAND.
