AUNT ELEANOR'S WILL

BY MRS. E. BURKE COLLINS.

"And to my nephew, Edmund Harrington, I give and bequeath the resistocks, etc., (after the above legacies are deducted) with the sole provision that he marry my niece, Bertha Lang, within one year after my decease."

A murmur of surprise went round the room as Lawyer Dent folded the formidable-looking document, and turned his keen, gray eyes upon the assembled group who were gathered in the little, plain parlor, to listen to the reading of Miss Eleanor Lang's will.

. "That is all," he remarked, gravely, arranged. "the last will and testament of our good, old friend, Miss Lang." "It is infamous!" cried Edmund Harrington, springing to his feet, his dark eyes flashing, his handsome face full of indignation.

"Rather a decided expression, Mr Harrington," observed the old lawyer. "You might go further and fare worse than to marry Bertha Lang.

eh, have you?" And he glanced searchingly into the perturbed face of the young man.

"No, sir; and what's more, I do not wish to. The truth is, Mr. Dent, I am | ly-wedded pair stepped into the vestry disappointed; I will not deny it. Aunt Eleanor has always represented herself to me as my best friend. She it was who reared me from my boyhood; I thank her, and shall always revere her memory for her kindness to me. Still, if she had never mentioned her intention of leaving me her money, I would wrote: not have expected it, or thought of such a thing. It was very unfair, this will, and I decline to have anything to do with it. "

"Hump! young man, when you are | "tell me, what does it mean?" as old as I am, and have seen as much of the world, you will not be so quick to refuse fifty thousand dollars for a mere whim. Go and call on Miss Bertha Lang. She lives in Lyell avenue, in the city of R--. Go and see her, my boy, and I warrant you will change your mind in reference to the matrimonial project."

"I never will!" Edmund Harrington cried, earnestly. "Listen, Dr. Dent I am engaged to be married already."

"Ah, indeed! Well, of course that alters the case," said the old lawyer, rubbing his white hands together briskly as he spoke, "that alters the case, my boy, and I am exceedingly sorry, exceedingly. Who is the girl?" he added, abruptly.

"Miss Mary Atherton," replied Edmund. "She also is from R---, and has been visiting the Winchesters here, friends of mine, you know. And the worst of it, the most unpardonable part is, that Aunt Eleanor knew all along how matters were between Miss Atherton and myself, and seemed anything but displeased. Though, of course, had it been otherwise—that being a matter for my own private engineering-it would have made no differ-

"Of course not," said the old lawyer, grimly. And Edmund began to think what a disagreeable old man Mr. Dent .was getting to be. "So you are determined to refuse fifty thousand dollars for the sake of the other girl, eh, Edmund?" the lawyer queried, watching the young man earnestly, meanwhile, from under his bushy brows. "It is to be hoped that your fair inamorata has a fortune of her own, for you, I believe, possess little, since you madly persist in throwing away your aunt's

"If it were only myself," he added, clasping the girl's white hand as he spoke . "if I were the only one concerned, Mary, I would not care much. But you, you-I have been represented to you as Miss Lang's heir. Mary, what are you going to do with me?"

"Be your wife," she answered, promptly, "if-you-want me." His answer was a rather demonstrative one, and I will not attempt to

True, there are lords of creation who reason otherwise, but Edmund Harrington was one of nature's noblemen, and an honor to his sex.

When Edmund had gone, Mary Atherton went to her own room, and due of my estate, personal property, sitting down by the open window, gazed out in the moonlight, very thoughtful,

"Dear Edmund," she exclaimed, aloud, "how noble and good he is. God bless him and reward him, and indeed, I know He will."

The next time that Edmund called upon his betrothed, he urged her to appoint the wedding day. She was an orphan and alone in the world; she had no one to consult and so it was all

"Happy is the bride that the sun shines on," whispered Edmund, as he met Mary in the little village church with no one present save the Winchesters, the old gentleman himself having requested the honor of giving away the bride. Lawyer Dent was present also, his

She smiled, but the tears shone in

"It means," she said, softly, "that I have deceived you, have won your heart under false pretenses. That I am the woman whom good old Aunt Eleanor desired you to marry, and I have been forced to listen to your anathemas against myself, and I know how you detested my very name. Edmund. I am Mary Bertha Lang, ah, you did not observe when the clergyman spoke my name, during the ceremony just now, and for the sake of proving your worth, and testing your disinterested nature, I allowed Aunt Eleanor to coax me into using my mother's maiden name of Atherton. You have won the woman you love, and Aunt Eleanor's fortune, after all. "

He caught her. in his arms; he had no words to utter; only a sincere prayer of gratitude went up from his thankful heart. And old Lawyer Dent rubbed his fat hands together, and chuck-

Edmund did not consider him at all unpleasant or disagreeable now, but a clever old fellow, for he had been in the secret from the first.

And thus, in her eccentric way, had Aunt Eleanor proved the ring of the true metal, and the reality of Edmund Harrington's love for her favorite niece.

DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., Gents: Having used a good deal of your Kendall's Spavin Cure with great success, I thought I would let you know what it has done for me. Two years ago I had as speedy a colt as was ever raised in Jeffer-son County. When I was breaking him, he kicked over the cross bar and got fast and tore one of his hind legs all to pieces. I employed the best farriers, but they all said he was spoiled. He had a very large thorough-pin, and I used two bottles of your Kendall's Spavin Cure, and it took the bune entirely of, and he sold afterwards for $1800 (do lars.) I have used it for bone spavins and wind alls, and it has always cured completely and left the leg smooth. It is a splendid medicine for rheumatism. I have recommended it to a good many, and they all say it does the work. I was in Witherington & Knee-

E. KIDERLEN'S Genuine HOLLAND GIN.

THE excellence of character and exceptional purity of this GIN has been recognized at the recent INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT E. Kiderlen was awarded the only Gold Medal offered to Distillers of Gin. This recognition of e superior quality of Kid erlen's Gin is particularly weighty, sweeping and satisfactory in face of the fact that at the Amsterdam Exhibition all the leading Gin houses were in Orders solicited from the Trace. T. WILLIAM BELL & Co., 331 Sole Agents for the Dominion o Canada. DOCK STREET, ST. JOHN N. B.
