TWO BRIDES.

BY L. C. "You think, then, it will be for m happiness to give Edward back his freedom ?"

"Yes, dear friend, I do. Your nature is so sensitive that with the peculiar disposition of Edward you would never be happy."

"I think you are right, but then it is a little difficult, because I think I am or was fond of him."

"Mere girlish fancy, Phoeben as sure you."

"It is so nice to have a friend such as you are, Amelie; you know I ways depend upon others for everything, and there are many who would take advantage of my weakness, and render me miserable, but you-"

"I have tried to be indeed a friend to you, in fact to both of you. I knew Edward so much longer than you that I considered him in the light of a brother, and have talked to him as such; but it is useless-only yesterday, when I was remonstrating with him in regard to his conduct to yourself, his reply was that you were too frivolous and childish to contribute to aught but the discomfort of a selfish man. I then made up my mind that you should not throw yourself away, and it is for that reason, dear Phœbe, that I speak to you. Forgive me, love?"

"You are a treasure, Amelie, and if there is aught to forgive I will prove my forgiveness by telling Edward I don't want to marry him. There he is now; I can see him out of the window; he looks melancholy enough, at the thought, I suppose, of marrying me. Let me run now and tell him he is quite free. I hate to see him look unhappy."

when you have told him, come to me and tell me the result of the interview, darling. Come, let us hasten."

Hand in hand Amelie Saintheu and Phæbe Rouen quitted the cozy little triumph, but it must be done quietly. sitting-room of the latter to put an end to the happiness of one who, as a man, let us commence our love again, and was as near perfection as exists in the aright." world. Phœbe had lost her mother when quite a baby; being the only child, her father would never suffer her her she learned in that moment, and out of sight. She was educated at home, surrounded by every conceivable to know. comfort and luxury; she had never been permitted to even think of herself-a mistake which Monsieur Rouen was now reaping the benefit of, seeing the child he would have every one mediate marriage. Leave Amelia to idolize often ridiculed, and her very innocence and artlessness designated as affection. All, however, courted her for her wealth, and many were the persons assembled at her country residence from the commencement of the summer until its close.

Phœbe cared for none of them, except Amelie, who had, though some seven years her senior, been her play. mate and companion since childhood. So necessary had Amelie become to Phœbe that she insisted she would never leave her. Monsieur Rouen saw that the presence of Amelie, who was a thorough woman of the world, would be of great value to Phœbe, consented, and for three years she had been an inmate of his household. Some two months before they had left town for the country, Amelie had begged to introduce her friend Edward Lelan; of course her request was granted, and from the moment Edward saw Phœbe he loved, which fact Amelie instantly saw, though Phoebe was unconscious of it. Two months passed, and Amelie, with rage and hatred, learned that the man, for whom she would have laid her life down, had proposed and been accepted by Phoebe. Such a result had never been imagined by her; she felt secure of Edward, and had introduced him for the purpose of being invited by Monsieur Rouen to his country residence.

That such a brainless fool as Phoebe should win him, or even attract his notice, except to show respect due to her as hostess, Amelie took as an insult She was bent on revenge and her plans were quickly formed. She smiled her brightest smile, and congratulated both her "dear frends" when told of the coming event; mentally she vowed it should never be. disgust one with the other. As the accepted suitor of Phoebe, Edward was, of course, one of Monsieur Rouen's guests, which afforded Amelie good opportunities to point out to him all Phoebe's defects-her awkwardness and her inability to comprehend his deep nature, and her constant avoidance of him. Edward was credulous; he had always found Amelie a true and faithful friend, and her apparently genuine pleasure at the success of his suite with Phoebe went to confirm him in the belief that all Amelie said was out of pure platonic affection for him. Little did he know that Phoebe was always monopolized by Amelie purposely, and that all she did awkward or undignified was dictated by Amelie.

As time went by he did not cease to love Phoebe; but he regretted he had loved her. He was too honorable to break the engagement, and the thought of separation was more than he could stand; but to deny that naught but misery would spring from a union with her was impossible.

Amelie watched all with eagerness, constantly irritating Phobe against Edward, until she had so blinded her that the rest was easy; and great was her feeling of exultation when Phoebe declared that she would give Edward up. It was with a light heart and fond, reassuring words that she led Phoebe to the spot where her lover was, and, kissing her, whispered in her ear:

"Have courage: it is only a few words and a worthless man will have his free-

Left alone within a few yards of Edward, Phoebe's courage almost forsook her; in her agitation she knew not what she did. She turned quickly, stumbled, and but for the timely assistance of Edward, would have fallen.

"You are not much hurt, Phoebe, I trust," coldly inquired Edward, when Phoebe had regained her footing.

"I did like you very much, but you are so quiet and disagreeable; and then you blame me for all." "All what?"

"I have yet to learn what you

"The misunderstanding there is." "The fault is with you, Phœbe. You should be more womanly, more kind and considerate to your friends and father."

"Friends-father!" echoed Phœbe, utterly nonplussed.

"You treat me with disdain. You deny me your presence, and tyrannize over Amelie."

"Monsieur Lelan, I am weak, silly and cowardly; but I will not tolerate insult. I came here to tell you I wish to be released, because you are unworthy the consideration of even such as I. You have mocked me, neglected me and openly avowed it was but my wealth you sought. You are free, and I thank heaven for the friend that opened my eyes."

It was more than Phoebe had ever in her life said at one time, and when she had concluded she was unable to move. "Who is your friend, Phoebe? Tell me quickly. I begin to see it all clearly-so clearly." "Amelie," faintly she replied.

"Oh, false, deceitful woman! Phoeber Amelie has done it all. It is she who has misrepresented you to me as a false, wicked, heartless, frivolous woman : to you she has traduced me. Her motive could be but jealousy. I knew her long ago, and might, had I not seen you, had wed her. She "I will go with you downstairs, and sought revenge for the slight, but thought your very artlessness one of her instruments of revenge. Her perfidy has been brought to light. Don't shrink from me, darling. We will yet Come, tell me if you care for me, and

Then and only then Phœbe knew her heart. How dear Edward was to she timidly told him what he wished

"Now, run into the house, Phoebe. Let Amelie fancy her purpose is accomplished. I will run to your father, tell him all and beg his consent to our imme, listen to all she says; but heed her not. Her punishment shall be great." Phœbe from that moment knew no will but Edward's, and seeking Amelia, told her she had done what they had both thought best.

"You good, obedient darling, now let me hasten to Edward. It will be painful to listen to his taunts, sneers and ridicule of yourself; but then will do me good to see his mortification. "For two hours Amelie sought Edward, and finding him just where Phoebe had left him, she concluded he had not moved since the interview. "Oh, Edward! I have looked everywhere for you. I know all; that deceitful little minx told me."

"Gladly-but how?"

"First tell me you think such wickedness deserves the worst punishment possible." "I do."

"Will you be ready to be married tomorrow at 3? There will no one present but Phoebe, her father, yourself

"This is greater happiness than I anticipated. You must shield me from their unjust suspicions."

"Leave all to me-at 3, remember." And, without another word, Edward walked away.

"Cold as ice, but once more he shall love me sincerely," soliloquized Amelia. Entering the house, she met Phoebe, but pleading a headache, she avoided

Three-Card Monte Men.

HOW THEY SWINDLED A POOR CLERGYMAN

The reason why I urge upon everyone, however smart, not to put too much confidence in his own smartness, will be seen further on.

Yesterday I had to wait several hours at Monmouth, Ills., a station on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy road. Monmouth has been frequeted by three carde monte men for years. I have always known it, have often seen them there, and have often written about

Well, yesterday they were there again. One of them was a Canada-Bill dialect, wanted to show me some strange "keerds" that he got up in Chicago.

"What were you doing up, there?" I asked, knowing that he was a three-card monte man, and feeling an inetrest in his mode.

"Me'and pap,"he said, "took up some hogs. We took up a pile on 'em, an' made a heap; but pap he got swindled by a three-keerd monte man. Got near ruined. But I grabbed the keerds, and I'll show you how they done it."

"Never mind, boys," I said, "I know all about it. I know the whole racket. Now I'll keep quiet, mind my own business, and let you try your monte game on some one a little more fresh."

The monte-boy saw at once that was posted and soon turned his attention to a good-looking, jolly, young and innocent clergyman in the depot. In a lew moments I saw that the innocent clergyman had become deeply interested. His interest grew as he watchew the cards. They were three ordinary business-cards, like these;

JOHN OSBORN & SON'S Piper-Heidsieck.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER, New York. WEBER PIANOS, New York.

"I believe I can tell which card has Weber's Pianos on it," said the innocent "All right-try it," said the monte-man, flopping them about. "There, that one !" said the clergy man, smiling. Sure enough he was right.

"I don't see how your poor father could loose all his money at such a simple game as that," said the clergyman. "Why your eyes can see the cards all

"Suppose you bet $5 that you can tell," suggested the monte-man. "All right, I'll risk it," said the clergyman, "though I don't like to win money that way."

Then the cards were turned, and of course the poor, unsuspecting clergyman lost. Again he tried, hoping to get his $5 back, but lost again. Then he put up his last dollar and lost that. Then seeming to realize his situation, he put his hand to his head and walked out of the depot.

"To think" he said "that I a, clergyman, should get caught at this game. Why I might have known it was three card monte. I've no respect for myself," and he wiped his eyes like a man who felt the most acute condem-

"Why don't you complain of the scoundrel?" I said. "I would, but I'm a clergyman, and if they should hear of my sin and foolishness in Peoria, I would be relieved. My family would suffer for my sins." "Then I'd keep quiet about it," I said; "but let it be a lesson to you never to think you know more than other

"But they've got my last dollar, and I want to go to Peoria. I must be there to preach on Sunday," said the innocent, suffering man. "Can't you borrow of some one?"

"No one knows me, and I don't like E. to tell my name here after this occurrence," said the poor man, half crying. "Very well," I said "hand me your card, and I will let you have $5 and you can send it on to me at the Palmer her, and not again that day did she House, Chicago, when you get to Peoria," and I handed the poor man the

A moment afterwards I spoke to the agent at the depot about the wickedness of these monte-men, and told him

"And you lent him $5."

"Yes I lent the poor man the money." "Well, by the great guns!" and then he swung his hat and velled to the "Bill, you know that ministeriallooking man around here?" "You mean the capper for the threecard monte-men, don't you?-Bill Keyes-Missouri Bill."

"Yes." "Well, by the great guns, he's the A dead silence of a few moments fol- best man in the whole gang;" he's just lowed, and the clergyman arrived. He struck old Eli Perkins for $5. Ohio, of Nov. 25th, 1882. Readers of the Commercial can not well forge that a large space has for years been taken up by Spavin Cure. We have had dealings with Dr. Kendall for many years, and we know of some large business houses in cities near by who have also dealt with him for many years, and the truth is fully and faithfully proven, not only that he is a good honest man, and that his celebrated Spavin Cure is not only all that it is recommended to be. but that the English Language is not capable of reommending it too highly. Kendall's Spavin Cure will cure spavins. There are hundreds of cases in which that has been proven to our certain knowledge, but, after all, if any person coufines the usefulness of this celebrated medicine to curing spavins alone, they make a big mistake. It is the best medicine known as an out-ward application for rheumatism in the human family. It is good for pains and aches, swellings, lameness, and is just as safely applied to men, wo-men and children as it is to horses. We know that there are other good liniments, but we do believe
