If any one will observe when the cow

choose to lie down in the vard or pasture it will be seen that they choose the bare ground rather than the sod or bedding of straw. The same is true of sheep. We have taken this hint and furnished the cow stable with dry earth bedding. Leaves and straw are poor absorbents in comparison. In the pig pens dry earth has no equal. In very cold weather we add straw or leaves; but until the weather is very cold the animals will be more comfortable with a bed of fresh soil, or soil changed once a fort-night or week. In the chicken house we have learned its great value as a deoderizer. Our roosts are over a sloping floor, on which we occasionally scatter dry earth. This is turned over with a shovel each week or oftener, and we can say the chicken house is free from any offensive odor and the bright combs and glossy feathers tell of the health of the fowls. Dry earth is a good preventative, too, of vermin on cattle, pigs and poultry. It must be procured in a dry time, and stored under a shed or in the stables. It not only promotes neatness and health, but saves the very element of the manures which make them most valuable, and most of it would evaporate if not absorbed by the dry earth. We do not like it as a bedding in a horse stable, but it should be found in every stable, to sprinkle the floor with as soon as the bedding is removed in the morning. When removed from the stables, stys and coops, it should be kept under cover for spring use, or for drilling with the wheat in the fall .- Cincinnati Commercial.

Competition in Advertising.

The lengths to which keen competition carries modern advertising would make a better book than has yet appeared. a better book than has yet appeared.
There is hardly any field of labor in which so much ingenuity, fancy, skill and money is expended, all of which, of course, everybody knows. Tennyson not long ago wrote a poem for an Eastern magazine for the confessed purpose of advertising curative, tonic and stimulating, without for the confessed purpose of advertising it. He received $15.000 for the effort. Now I hear he has been offered $100,000 for a poem advertising a certain manufacturers' wares. My Lord Alfred, most people will be inclined to remark, will be a goose if he doesn't accept. Advertising ed by so doing. $500 will be paid for a has given a certain impetus to art.
