Tale of the Red Pike.

"I thought I should find you out with the girls, Mr. Godwin. You should have been with us. We've had such a scramble over Honister Crag, and brought back no end of flowers for Gertrude. But one thing I must say, that fellow Losford is a jolly muff, though he doesn't look it. Just a funk, girls, and nothing else. Will you give me some tea, Mrs. Godwin?" "What' nonsense you talk, Bob! cried his sister, conscious by some feminine instinct that her friend's face was hotter than a moment before "You are a perfect mauvais enfant bursting in like that. I wish Mr. Losford would teach you manners."

"I'd like to see him try. It would take a pluckier man than he is. Why, he wouldn't come within yards of the edge, Mrs. Godwin !" "He showed his' usual good sense, Master Robert," was that lady's tart reply. She had her reasons for looking favorably upon Walter Losford, of Losford court, Monmouthshire, by no means the least honored guest at Mr. Godwin's lake villa. And they were a very cheery and pleasant party, the pleasantest set, Gertrude thought, that her mother had yet got together, and Gertrude was a young lady of decided tastes and somewhat difficult to please. Even Bob Marston, when he was not wanted at inopportune moments, was as amusing as any other Eton boy. Nevertheless, at this moment, two people at least were ardently longing to make his ears tingle.

"And what is the programme for to-morrow, Mr. Godwin?" resumed the young gentleman, not a whit daunted by the unfavorable reception of his last remark. "Can we picnic on the Red Pike? It would be jolly fun."

The host hummed and hawed; he rather preferred an open air entertainment at a place accessible in an open carriage. But if you have a house among the mountains, up them you must go. The climbing disease is infectious, and there is no evading it until by a permanent residence you become proof against its attacks. Mr. Godwin would have to succumb sooner

"Yes, Bob," said Gertrude, suddenly laying down the fan with which she was playing, "we will go to Red Pike to-morrow.'

And Bob, who thought that, in his own language, he had rather "put his foot in it," was comforted, and knew that to the Red Pike he would go.

Gertrude's face, as she went up to days. dress for dinner, was thoughtful. "He showed his usual good sense," Mrs. Godwin had said, and the words kept singing in her daughter's ears until her lip began to curl with scorn. If there was one thing which Gertrude admired it was courage.

Was she beginning, almost more than beginning, to like a man who could be called a coward, even by a boy? It made her cheeks tingle with shame and anger. Proud and high-spirited herself, good sense the kind Mrs. Godwin meant was not in high esteem with her. And, alas! the insinuation chimed in with other things. Walter Losford was hardly one to please a romantic girl at first sight. Cold, sensible, and wanting in enthusiasm even in his ambition, trying nearly everything by the arguments of reason with impartail severity, he would have made there, in a lonely part of the road, he a just and not too merciful judge. Living by rule of thumb, no wonder "That's him," whilst the other assertthat he looked older than his 30 years, or that he repelled chance acquaintances, who called him a prig. ## A Remarkable Story.

The Cornishman (Eng.) publishes a narrative of a murder alleged to have been committed in the locality, the narrator professing to have remained silent, under a fearful oath imposed on him at the time of the committal of the deed, some fifty years since. The writer, who signs himself "G. H. O.." and from Penzance. declares himself willing to indicate the spot where the body of the murdered man was buried.

Shortly, the story is as follows :-The writer, then a junior in a firm in London, of which he is now the head, came to Penzance in September, 1834, to arrange terms among local tin smelters. He left Penzance one evening to visit a friend in St. Just, which is some six miles from Penzance. On the way met two men, when he heard one say, ed, "No, it is not." They again faced each other, when the two men said they had taken him for another person. Altogether, his friends said, a little writer called his attention to the suswanting in charity; too practical, too picious character of the two men. The man, who said he was a mine agent,

The Bad and Worthless is especially true of a family mediciney and it is positive proof that the remed, imitated is of the highest value. As soon as it had been tested and proved by the whole World that Hop Bitters was the purest, best and most valuable family medicine on earth, many imitations sprang up and began to steal the notices in which the press and the people of the country had expressed the merits of H. B., and in every way trying to induce suffering invalids to use their stuff instead, expecting to make money on the credit and good name of H. B.
