The Flight of Years.

BY BELLE BIRCH, - PHILA.

Oh light-footed years, how you come and go,

Like the noiseless fall of winter's snow;

Softly and quietly as feather in air,

Flying through space—to one knows not where: Floating, Skimming along.

Your foot-steps are music, their memory a song, Taking a flower, as you pass, from old

Time, To plant in a warmer or sunnier clime,

Spreading some shadowy laid sun-gleam- hair, You pass over the heads of men every- where: You pass, with your freight falling light on the few, Like the saw flakes of winter or sum- mer's rain, Or heavily lumbering, laden with woe,

You pass, and the green grass is crushed as you go. Lumbering, Tumbling, Rushing along.

Like an army all hostesses of death is your train, Crushing beneath your great wheels as you go, The life out of those who would vanquish the foe, Wading through rivers of blood of the slain, You pass on all reckless and ne'er come again— Oh! terrible years, with your shadows so long, How dearly you fall on the sufferers of wrong, Slowly and sadly in spectre like forms,

Pointing your fingers to Future's dark
