JESSIE'S PARLOR

An orchard, the branches heavy with golden apples, here and there a ruddy "windfall", half hidden in the long grass, and at the foot of the most richly laden trees, a young girl, half asleep, with an ill-used book flung carelessly down, and indolent white arms thrown above her pretty dark head.

'Jessie!' She made a sleepy little movement indicative of annoyance at being interrupted in the middle of her sleep.

'Jessie, I say!' Miss Jessie rose slowly, and picked up her book. She was a tall, slight girl, of about eighteen years of age, with a rather pale face, and gray eyes, fringed with long black lashes. These eyes were her greatest charm. A little white gate divided the orchard from the garden, and Jessie passed through it with exasperating slowness.

'Was there ever such a girl!' thought her sister, her elder by twenty years,at least the daughter of her father's first wife. Caroline had loved her young stepmother, and when she died had tried to take a mother's place to the tiny, dark-eyed baby she left behind; but Jessie had proved a very troublesome charge.

'Well,' said Jessie, interrogatively, looking at Caroline standing in the door way, with her sleeves tucked up, and her stout arms covered with flour. 'What is it Caroline?'

'Come and move your rubbish out of the front room.

'What for?' asked Jessie, in undisguised astonishment.

'Because father's going to let it to young fellow from London.' Jessie looked indignant. Her par- pair of bright eyes aad a slim girlish lor with the piano in it, to be let to

Farjeon, Sarah Douchey, William Black, Mrs. Oliphant, Hugh Conway, and others. A story of enthralling interest, entitled WYLLARD'S WEIRD, by Miss Bradden, is now running in The Daily and Weekly Globe, and will be continued till completed. It will be succeeded by a story from the powerful pen of JISTIN MCCARTHY, and after the last named story is completed there will follow one from R. L. FARJEON, the famous novelist. In addition to the regular continued story, there are always running in the 12 and 3 o'clock editions of Daily, and in The Weekly Globe one or more additional novels by authors of world-wide repute. In this manner readers get five or six complete novels each year.

AS AN AGRICULTURAL NEWSPAPER THE WEEKLY GLOBE IS UNSURPASSED.
