LE CHIEN D'OR OF QUEBEC.

A LEGEND OF INJURY AND REVENGE. The famous Chien d'Or, or Golden Dog, of Quebec is a rude stone carving, gilded, and now built into the wall above the entrance to the new city Postoffice. Beneath the crouching dog's figure is this inscription in old French :-"JE SVIS VN CHIEN RONGE L'OS En le rougeant je prends mon Repos, Vn temps viendra qvi n'est pas venv. Qve je morderay qvi mavra mordv," Signifying, "I bide my time," or, more literally,

"I am a dog gnawing a bone, While gnawing it I take my rest,

A time will come, which has not yet, slew him. When I will bite who have bitten me.' In the opinion of some of the best Canadian antiquaries the sculpture was originally, and should be now called La Chien qui dort (the dog who sleeps) and perhaps the carving was designed cerning the danger of waking sleeping name of le Chien d'Or because gilded ever since it began to be talked about.

The legend of injury, resentment, treachery, and revenge connected with it states that M. Nicolas Jaquin Philibert, a wealthy merchant of Quebec, placed the carving and incription over the door of his own house (which, before its destruction became a Freemason's hall, and still later was used as the city postoffice)—to signify his hatred for M. Francois Bigot, of evil memory, the 13th and last Intendant of New France. What Bigot had done to rouse Philibert's enmity is not stated, but the Intendant's record. Fond of disthe ladies, Bigot found the emoluments bagatelle in comparison with his expenditure. Clothed with official rank second only to that of the Governor, and with power greater in many respects; controlling the finances, the administration of justice, and the trade Madame de Pompadour, then regnant over Louis XV., practiced as Intendant of Louisiana and of Louisbourg (where his tyrannies contributed materially to the capture of the place by the British) in all the bad uses of power; Bigot, on las ling at Quebec in 1748, straightway proceeded to organize a ring, the history of which might have given Boss Tweed valuable hints in the art of peculation. With the aid of shrewd rascals recommended a Bigot, so the old record remarks "by ignorance and low birth," he accomplished the plundering of the home government, the inhabitants and the merchants of the colony so satisfactorily that he was able to defray the expenses of a miniature French court at Quebec, with its accompaniment of a considerable harem. His Pompadour was Madame Hugues Pean, nee Angelique de Meloises, the young, pretty, witty wife of Town-Major Pean, otherwise useful to Bigot as right-hand in his oppressions and knaveries.

Col. de Bougainville, returning from Paris with dispatches announcing the coming invasion of Wolfe, found the wicked Intendant quartered with Madame Pean. He seems indeed to have had a knack of discovering valuable creatures in men with handsome wives, Cadet, whose contract for supplying the army with meat was a fat one, possessed a wife known as La Belle Amazone Aventuriere, and if Duchesneau, the cobler's son, owned no such recommendation to unscrupulousness as to have publicly boasted that "to get rich he would cheerfully rob a church "

Whether Philibert had been fleeced by Bigot, or offended by the libertine's advances toward a female relation, or merely scandalized by the great man's outrageous tyrannies, the legend makes no mention. Some serious affront the the story says, and by way of giving Philibert new reason for animosity, quartered troops on him. The officer in command was one of Bigot's boon companions, Monsieur de Repentigny, of noble family. By one account Philibert resisted entrance to his house, and in the struggle was run through by de Repentigny's sword. Another narrative makes the officer murder the merchant hall. Both agree that Philibert was killed; that de Repentigny fled, either to France or Acadie; that he received pardon from the King through Bigot's influence with the Pompadour; that he returned to Quebec and either offered or complied with an order to give pecuniary compensation to the widow for the loss of her husband. Afterward he was promoted and sent on service to the East Indies, where Dupleix, as Governor of Pondicherry, was then attempting to advancement of the French power which were rendered mere dreams by was busy at work. the genius of Clive.

It does not appear that Bigot was to have instigated. In the midst of an overridden, starving population, he continued to live a merry, wicked, gainful life, of which we got an interesting glimpse on the memoir of Monsieur Frauquet, inspector of fortifications, who describes himself as light royally treated, during this visit to Quebec, by the intendant. Among other pleasures Bigot treated him to a voyage to Montreal on the Government batteau, the oldest, as Joe came along. "How are Gondola, a long, flat comfortable craft of 80 tons burthen, propelled! by sails and fourteen rowers. Provisioned with all manner of delicate viands and choice wines, extremely festive days and nights were enjoyed under a canopied | But we boys ain't-that is, we ain't pracspace in the middle, enclosed by curtains and cashioned with blue silk.

Also Mousieur Frauquet dwells fondly on the lively times he had with the jolly and pretty ladies of Monsieur Bigot's court, at Quebec and Trois Revieres.

But Philibert's death was to be avenged. The usual and most dramatic It does not appear that he designed to family.

include Bigot in his vengeance. Suddenly quitting Quebec all trace of him was lost for many months. Then his mother received a letter, "My dearest mother, we are avenged. My father's murderer is no more." Pursuing de Repentigny to the east, the young man had met him in a street of Pondicherry and killed him in the combat that instantly ensued.

Another story, heard by Hawkins in Quebec fifty years ago, differs widely from this. It states that the murdered merchant's brother coming out from France to settle his estate, became so bent on revenge that he pursued de Repentigny to Pondicherry and duly Sceptical antiquaries again believe the main features of the legend to be pure fiction, obtaining form through the popular effort to account for the remarkable Chien d'Or and curious inscription. That the house from which from recollection of the proverb con- the stone wall removed to its present position belonged to a Philibert or dogs. The stone has obtained the Philiber, is, however, certain. When pulled down in 1871, the workmen found the following record on the corner stone:-

> "NICOLAS JAQVIN dit Philibert m'a pose 20 Aost

1735. I have found no morsel of proof that e Chien d'Or was not built into the house when completed in 1736. Rude sculptures akin to heraldic devices were not uncommonly placed over the doors of the bourgeoisie in the old time before us. If the Jaquin family were proud of a record signifying them to be good conjecture may easily find a motive in haters, the dog and inscription might easily be accounted for, and the asplay, an inveterate gambler, graceful, sumption that the carving dates from moval. a bachelor, and a terrible fellow among 1736 would be very strong. In that case the tale of Bigot's annoyance therepertaining to his great office a mere by would fail, as he did not land in Quebec till 1748.

Without reference to the wicked Intendant's fate the story would be incomplete. Held responsible on his return to France for the disorganization and disaffection which had assisted the of the colony; possessing the favour of British conquest of Canada, Bigot was placed in the Bastile to await trial. Afterward, with a host of accomplices, he was charged with innumerable offences, summed up again and again in the court record as m nopoles, abus. Vexations et prevarications - found guilty, stripped of his all stealings, and sentenced to perpetual banishment from the kingdom.

One interesting incident of his trial was a petition of the mother and widow of the Marquis de Montcalm that Bigot should be punished for having libelled the dead hero in a justificatory memoir published by him on his return to France. The ladies demanded the memoir's suppression and Bigot's condemnation to pay a fine of 10,000 livres for the benefit of the poor of the Hotel Dieu. As he had already been beggared for the benefit of the Crown, the poor got nothing, but the court ordered the suppression of the injurious terms applied to Montcalm, in particular that of "delateur" (informer), and granted the ladies permission to publish the udgment, apparently at their own ex-

He took umbrage, however, aunt and cousins. Then after a chat about the folks, Cousin Joe went to sleep in the "spare bed room," with feathers and pillows enough for two, and did not get up until 9 o'clock the next morning. He told the story on himself afterward. When he came down the first one to welcome him was Aunt Hannah, who, after the usual good-morning, said :

"Joseph, I suppose that your customs in the South in many ways are different from ours. Are you in the habit of foully while descending the lower town drinking something a little strengthenin' and appetizin' in the mornin' ?" Joe signified that such was a habit with
