NOT WHAT, OR WHERE, BUT HOW.

'Please put on your thinking-cap for my benefit this evening, auntie,' said Aleck with a cheerful smile.

'Very well, Aleck, what is it?' Placid-faced Widow Grey spoke kindly, but without raising her eyes from the expectedly and asked for Aleck. 'He's skein of yarn she was carefully placing not been, away one evening nor missed upon the smooth arms of the old swift. a day at school the whole term. He's

A sharp rap at the outer door cut short the old lady's wise speech, and Esquire Eaton, a short, stout, broad-shouldered man, bluntered in. 'I was passing, and called to see if my socks were done,' he said declining, with a bow, and wave of his hand, the HOWARD ALLEN, - PROPRIETOR splint bottomed arm-chair Aleck moved forward. 'I am off for Washington in the morning instead of at night to-morrow, as I expected, and all the last things have to be done up this evening.'

'I am just toeing them off, sir,' said Mrs. Grey. 'The white yarn only came up an hour ago, and Aleck is winding it for me,' 'Yes, sir,' replied to ad respectfully; 'and one of mine, when a little fellow, was to learn to knit. My mother taught me to knit a whole stocking the winter before she died. So when yarn enough is wound, I can pick up the stitches for Auntie Grey and help her about toeing them off. When they are finished, sir, I will bring them to your house, and if you are all in bed I will leave the package in the porch, at the side door. Will PINE CLAPBOARDS, HEM-that do, sir?'

'Good,' said the squire, looking pleased now. -'It will do very well, indeed,' and dropping a bank-note into the widow's lap he bustled away with her fervent 'God bless you!' ringing in his ears and warming his heart all the way

It was eleven o'clock before Aleck, after a busy evening, followed by a brisk walk in the frosty air, opened the gate leading through a deep yard, to the squire's handsome dwelling. That gentleman himself opened the side door as Aleck went lightly up the steps of the porch.

'All about me,' he said. 'Come in and I will pay you for your trouble.' 'You may pay Auntie Grey for that 'Come in,' repeated the squire, with something more than mere politeness in his voice, and the lad obeyed. A gust of wind from the open door-way sent the papers on the library table flying like a flock of sea-gulls to all parts of the room. Aleck removed his cap and mittens, and picking up the papers re-turned them to the table. As the squire put a letter that he had been writing into its envelope he watched the lad out of a corner of his eye. 'Going to school this winter!' he

'I suppose not, sir. I am looking for something to do. 'What do you want?'

'I cannot be over particular, sir. I don't matter so much what or where the work is, as what I make of it,' he

I will give you work, then, and we Rosary will see what you make of it. This call to Washington is very unexpected to me as you perhaps know. My wife and daughters are to go with me. I have had time for very few arrangements. The housekeeper and her husband are to be left in charge, but they are getting old. You may come here and stay and go to the high school, and do for your clothes and board whatever you see needs to be done.'

'What shall you expect me to do, sir?' asked Aleck, looking puzzled. You may get the mail three times a day. The postmaster has been directed what is to be forwarded. If you see anything else that needs to be done you can do it if you feel disposed, just as you would were this your father and mother's home and they had been unexpectedly called away to be gone for several months.' 'I see, sir,' said Aleck. 'I will be on hand in the morning bright and early. Sopposite Golden Ball.

Good night, sir.' The squire chuckled to himself as the door closed. 'I've given him a chance, and if he's the boy I take him to be he will make the most of it. I shouldn't have thought of it, though, if I hadn't liked the way he was winding that yarn. He had little idea that 'You can keep an eye on him, said Squire Eaton to Margaret, the house-keeper, next morning, 'but I hardly think he is the kind of a lad to turn out like Percy Stiles; and mind, now, that he never hears Percy's story.'

Margaret nodded; and as the master went out, John, her husband, said,-'Wasn't he a queer one? The squire has never had anything to do with boys since then; and yet he dotes on boys.'

'I know it,' said Margaret; 'just to think how much he set by Master Percy and what a chance the lad threw away. Do you remember how the squire looked at first, when he really believed there had been a burglar in the house, and he said: 'You are a hero, Percy. You have saved our lives and our property!' "I remember,' said John; 'but that ADVERTISERS
